Intact Tenth Corps Makes 'Juncture' With Eighth Army, MacArthur Reveals

Joyous Yule Is Observed Here Despite War in Korea

Children Celebrate As World Outlook Gives Area Adults More Somber View

Washington spent a joyous Christmas yesterday, marred only by the somber realization that peace on earth still was just a hope in an anxious world.

It was a family holiday here. The children started the day opening gaily wrapped presents. Then there were the festive Christmas dinners, the visiting with friends and neighbors, quaffing of eggnog, while the youngsters tried out their playthings, indoors or out.

The weather was pleasant, a little on the cold side. The high was 36 at 3:10 p. m., and the low 27, at 7:10 a. m. The chilly outdoors gave warning of the weatherman's prediction of occasional light snow this morning. The high is expected to be the freezing point.

For those who could not get home for Christmas, there was the telephone. So many tried to call home, that at times the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. reported a six-hour delay on some long distance circuits and used a recorded message to announce this. Indications were that yesterday's calls would exceed last Christmas' total of 65,000.

At the service hospitals, special treats were arranged for the patients, especially those back from Korea. Many, however, were home at Christmas through the efforts of Operation Santa Claus. The Military Air Transport Service for the past two weeks has been flying home patients, including some stretcher cases, sometimes with attendants.

Travel officials, recovering from a heavy exodus for the three-day weekend, reported only slight movement during the day, but they girded for heavy duty in the evening and early today as the travelers returned home.

Union Station had plans for six extra sections of trains both incoming and outgoing. The Greyhound and Trailways bus terminals also expected heavy volume as the night wore on.

The American Automobile Association reported heavy auto travel with many resultant trouble calls as motorists ran out of gas and couldn't find stations open.

The downtown section of Washington was almost deserted except for the diners-out and movie show goers—a drastic change from the sidewalk-jammed days immediately before the holiday.

Even crime took a holiday. Police headquarters men reported trouble calls were the fewest in their memory.

No Amnesty for Repeaters

Drunk Court Has Light Load For Yule, but Not Defendants

Leniency which usually accompanies the Christmas holiday was absent in Municipal Court yesterday, when repeater after repeater stepped before the bench on drunk charges.

Judge Gallagher

None of the 75 persons brought into court pleaded the usual over-indulgence in spirits because it was Christmas time. To most, their appearance was routine—they'd been there under the same circumstances before.

Judges Nadine L. Gallagher and Walter J. Casey this time handed out the sentences for repeaters—ranging from $1 or 2 days to $30 or 30 days.

The number of cases was unusually light, even for an ordinary Monday. The usual weekend accumulation of drunks brought into court on that day ranges from 100 to 150.

Officials said the light load probably resulted from the unofficial Christmas amnesty of police, who in many cases sent home overzealous celebraters by taxicab, rather than arrest them.

Police either were lenient on the whole or the Christmas spirit kept Washington's criminals and vagrants indoors.

The Second Precinct, regarded as the busiest in numbers of arrests, reported for the first time since the station house was set up in 1941 that it had no prisoners in its cell block between 6 a. m. and 1:20 p. m. yesterday. The First Precinct, usually almost equally as busy, had only two prisoners during the same period of time.

Los Angeles Jails 1222 on Weekend

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 25 (AP). Holiday drunkenness waned tonight toward the close of a three-day weekend that sent 1222 drunks to jail, more than 900 persons to hospitals as the result of traffic accidents—and 11 to the morgue.

Police said 362 of the drunks were driving cars when arrested. There were 1034 accidents.

Veep Grandson Involved in 2-Car Crash

Alben B. Truitt, 17, Driving Mother's Auto In Macomb St. Wreck

Alben B. Truitt, 17, grandson of Vice President Alben W. Barkley, was involved in a two-car collision at 34th and Macomb sts. nw. yesterday afternoon, police reported.

They said Truitt, who lives at 2325 Wyoming ave. nw., was driving his mother's automobile west on Macomb st. when it collided with a car going south on 34th st., driven by Miss Kathleen R. McCarthy, 28, of 3520 34th st. nw.

After the accident, Miss McCarthy's car swerved and struck a telephone pole. A passenger in her car, Mary Kirkpatrick, 12, of 3400 Porter st. nw., was thrown into the street, according to police. Truitt was uninjured, police said.

Miss McCarthy was treated at Emergency Hospital for head injuries, Mary for a hip injury.

Truitt is home from a school in Connecticut for the Christmas holidays. Miss McCarthy was on her way to visit relatives in the southeast section when the accident occurred, according to police.

ATS Enlisted Man Killed in Va. Crash

Pfc. Lillard Preston Steelman, 27, attached to the 1254th Air Transport Service at Washington National Airport, was killed shortly before 7 o'clock last night when the convertible car he was driving overturned on Route 236, about 1½ miles west of Annandale, Va.

Yule Traffic Takes Toll of 492 in Nation

Accidental Deaths From Other Causes Add Another 132

More Americans died on the Nation's highways over the 1950 Christmas weekend than in any Yuletide since before World War II.

As the three-day holiday waned, at least 492 deaths from traffic accidents had been reported. Last year's toll, a record since the war years, was 413.

Accidental deaths from miscellaneous causes such as fires and exposure added another 132 for a total of 624 since 6 p. m. Friday.

A continuation of the highway accident death rate, slightly more than six an hour, would not top the country's all-time Christmas toll—555 set in 1936.

Admiral Bauer Dead

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 25 (AP). Rear Admiral George W. Bauer, retired, was found dead in his apartment today. Police said his body was hanging in a noose fashioned from Christmas neckties.

Truman Cuts Visit Short, Plans Talks

President to Confer With Marshall and Acheson Tonight; 'Nothing Critical'

(Picture on Page 2)

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Dec. 25 (U.P.).—President Truman announced today he will cut short his Christmas vacation at home and fly back to Washington Monday to confer with Secretary of State Acheson and Defense Secretary Marshall about the Korean situation and American preparedness.

Press Secretary Joseph Short said, "I want to emphasize that nothing new and critical has developed."

He said the President decided to return one day early because of the press of important matters that had piled up.

"This is not tied to any specific event," Short emphasized.

He said the decision was reached after the President had talked today with Acheson by telephone in Washington. Short said Acheson also had talked with Marshall.

The Chief Executive will get in touch with both immediately upon his return to Washington late Monday to set up a conference with them and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, at Blair House Monday night.

Short said the President planned to leave Kansas City around 2 p. m.

Short said the early return is to confer with Acheson and Marshall "to draw together the arrangements being made for General Eisenhower's departure, requirements for the situation in Korea in the light of Chinese Communist activity there, and the problems of studying preparedness at home."

Eisenhower will head the European defense program.

Short said the President decided it would be better if he could clear up some of these matters before devoting himself to preparation of his state of the Union message and two other messages that will go to the new Congress which meets January 3.

Marshall, who has been spending the Christmas holidays at Pinehurst, N. C., also will fly back to Washington Monday.

NPA Planning To Hire 5000 Persons Here

Total Job Forecast Is 11,000 by Sept. 1 In Production Agency

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

The employment forecast for Commerce's National Production Authority is 11,000 jobs by next September 1. Officials say about 5000 of them will be in this city.

NPA has only 750 employes now. The proposed build-up to 11,000 in eight months would be a 1500 percent increase.

Some people believe the employment prediction is on the conservative side. The World War II Production Board had more than twice that number of employes, and NPA soon will be handling many of the same problems.

NPA now has 50 field offices, and new ones are being set up in industrial centers. The field office structure of Commerce is being used. The Commerce offices are merely being expanded to enforce NPA orders. In addition, NPA has set up offices in eight cities where Commerce had no offices.

NPA is in the market for Grade 4 stenos (no status necessary), industrial specialists in aluminum, copper, iron and steel, container experts, and industrial engineers who are highly qualified in material conservation.

Gives New Data

Wind Tunnel Speeds Air At 5296 MPH

Wind-tunnel tests in which blasts of air traveled more than eight times faster than the speed of sound were disclosed yesterday by Rear Admiral A. G. Noble, chief of the Navy's Ordnance Bureau.

Noble said these and related experiments promise "invaluable data for the design of faster-flying and longer-range weapons."

The speed of sound varies with temperature. At sea level, with the temperature at 59 degrees, sound travels at 761 miles per hour. But in the frigid stratosphere, at 67 below zero, its speed is only 662 mph.

Thus, theoretically at least, eight times the speed of sound would be somewhere between 5296 and 6088 miles an hour.

Commenting on Noble's statement, an official of the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics told a reporter wind-tunnel tests at the California Institute of Technology have simulated speeds 10 times faster than sound.

Reporting "significant progress" in the science of air speed since World War II, Noble said tests conducted by Dr. P. P. Wegener of the Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oak, Md., explored "an unknown region which holds promise of producing essential design information for vastly superior weapons."

Noble said:

"This tremendous speed was obtained by causing air at considerable pressure to flow through a rectangular nozzle, scarcely wider than the thickness of several sheets of paper, into an expanding throat."

Bolted-down models are used in wind tunnels to study problems encountered by fast-flying bodies, such as air resistance or "drag," heat from friction, and suction at the base of the missile.

Officials emphasized it is a long stretch between wind-tunnel experiments and actual production of planes or guided missiles.

Fighting Men Weep for Joy At Sanctuary

'Let Us Fight On,' Say Marines Arriving At Pusan Harbor

PUSAN, Dec. 25 (U.P.)—Tough Marines and GIs wept this Christmas morning when they reached this safe harbor.

They were the last of the soldiers snatched from the Communist trap in northeast Korea and they cried with joy when their armada of rescue ships anchored here.

Clean-shaven, bright-eyed, tired, clutching their weapons and ammunition, they trudged down gangplanks. They had been well-fed and thawed out on the trip down.

Their buddies, evacuated earlier, unashamedly cried also as they rushed to embrace the fighting rear guard—who were not expendable.

Tank Is Bloody Symbol

Navy and Army officers were wet-eyed. Even the Korean orphans and refugees ashore on their way to GI-sponsored Christmas parties cheered wildly as the men entered sanctuary.

Symbolic of it all was the blood-encrusted hull of the M-26 medium tank glistening in the bright winter sun as it was lowered to Pier No. 1.

It was only one of the armored vehicles which fought from the icy mountains of northeastern Korea to the escape port of Hungnam, carrying wounded, most of whom had to be strapped to the hull. It was the blood of these courageous Leathernecks that shone in the sun.

"That tank never stopped fighting and it brought back all the wounded it could carry and for my money that's living up to the best traditions of the Marine Corps," said Corpl. William F. Moore, Cambridge, Mass.

"We fought with valor wherever we went," said the Marines' soft-spoken, ramrod commander, Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Smith, who never utters a word of profanity. "We defeated every Chinese unit

105,000 Men Redeployed In Hungnam Evacuation

Many Are Already In New Positions At Pusan, Pohang, General Discloses

TOKYO (Tesday), Dec. 26 (AP)—General MacArthur announced today the successful redeployment of United Nations forces by sea from the Hungnam beachhead "to a juncture" with the U. S. Eighth Army in Korea.

The U. N. commander did not elaborate on his use of the word "juncture." However, Maj. Gen. Edward M. Almond said on Christmas Day that his Tenth Corps troops were either at sea off Hungnam or already in the "Pusan-Pohang concentration area" on the southeastern Korea coast.

The communique did not say whether the historic seaborne withdrawal of 105,000 Tenth Corps troops from the northeast meant a new defense line across the Korean peninsula, south of the 38th Parallel. If such a line were being organized it would be a matter of highest military security.

Says Reds Tipped Plans

MacArthur said the movement from Hungnam was necessitated by Communist China's intervention in the Korean war and carried out with "great skill and coordination." He reviewed the military situation from the time of the short-lived U.N. November offensive through the evacuation of the last Allied toehold in the northeast.

The U.N. drive unmasked the Chinese Reds' real intentions toward Korea, he said, and probably saved the U.N. forces from destruction. He asserted:

"We exposed before too late secret political and military decisions of enormous scope and threw off balance enemy military preparations aimed surreptitiously massing the power capable of destroying our forces with one mighty extended blow."

Breathing fire and vowing to fight anew, the first of the American, South Korean and some British troops of the United States Tenth Corps already were in positions around Pusan and Pohang, in far southeast Korea.

Their last man and last gun, plus about 100,000 anti-Communist North Korean civilians, sailed from the demolished port of Hungnam on Christmas Eve.

Corps Remains Intact

The Tenth Corps remained intact, a fighting army with its weapons and supplies.

The deliberate, orderly retreat was hailed as one of the most remarkable accomplishments of modern warfare. It was announced on Christmas Day—just six months to the day after the Soviet-trained

Coronation Chair Damaged

Theft of Stone of Scone Gives Britons a Jolt, Provides Added Lift for Scots' Christmas

The Stone appears beneath the throne's seat

LONDON, Dec. 25 (AP).—Thieves believed motivated by intense Scottish nationalism stole the ancient Stone of Scone from Westminster Abbey today. The priceless relic is a central figure in the coronation of British kings.

The thieves conducted their get-away so well Scotland Yard detectives and police throughout Britain still were without a clew after an intense Christmas Day hunt.

Nationalists and even the more moderate home rule advocates in Scotland cheered the news that the stone had been removed from the abbey where it had rested since 1296.

In removing the 336-pound stone, the thieves broke a large splinter off the leg of the coronation throne, the oldest piece of furniture in the abbey. Twenty-seven monarchs have been crowned on it, including Britain's present ruler, George VI.

The stone had rested underneath the throne. Its position symbolized the union of the crowns of England and Scotland in the 17th Century.

John MacCormich, chairman of the Scottish Covenant movement, said whatever the outcome of the "present adventure" he hoped the stone ultimately would be kept in Scotland except on coronation occasions. He continued:

"The Stone of Destiny (Scottish name for the stone) properly belongs to the people of Scotland. Under the terms of the Treaty of Northampton in 1328 the stone, which is the ancient symbol of Scottish nationality, was to be returned to Scotland, but that treaty was never observed."

Nearly two million Scots last year signed the Scottish Covenant, a petition for a greater measure of home rule along the lines of that enjoyed by Northern Ireland.

Supporters of the covenant have made it clear they are completely loyal to the King. However, a small extreme group in Scotland desires to cut all ties with England. Between the two groups are other grades of Scottish nationalism.

R. E. Muirhead, of the Scottish nationalist secretariat at Glasgow, told a reporter he had no knowledge of any plot to steal the stone.

Nigel Trander, a Scottish Covenant leader, said:

"This venture may appear foolish and childish on the surface but it will have the effect down south of focusing attention on Scotland's complaints. It takes a lot to get any news of Scotland's national existence into the English press and this sort of thing is the only type of home rule story that gets a break in the English newspapers."

While the theft generally was believed to be the

The man who "works for himself" will be working for his own retirement starting January 1, as 4,700,000 self-employed come under Social Security protection.

Another 400,000 salesmen and agent-drivers also will be admitted at that time.

The self-employed category includes individuals or partners in business or manufacturing, writers, artists, private teachers or independent contractors. At least $400 a year must be earned after paying taxes and expenses to become eligible.

Many professional men in practice for themselves, or farm operators, are not eligible, although their employes are.

Since the self-employed person has no employer to contribute for him, his tax rate has been set at 2¼ percent or three-fourths the combined rate on employer and employe. This rate will continue through 1953.

From 1954 to 1959, the rate will be 3 percent; from 1960-64, 3¾ percent; 1965-69, 4½ percent and after 1969, 4 7/8 percent. Only the first $3600 of total wage and self-employment income is taxable.

The first tax will be payable in 1952, when the self-employed person files his 1951 income tax return. At that time, he will fill in a special schedule on the tax

A Little World Comes Falling Down—And All for Nothing

By Tom Lambert

OFF HUNGNAM, Dec. 25 (AP).—In time of war, occasionally the warmakers destroy something essentially simple and nonmilitary, like a fence or house, because it stands in the way of the war.

Such destruction, often hasty and unexplained, is tragedy as great as war itself.

A few days ago such destruction and tragedy fell swiftly on a North Korean family which lived in a three-room clay-walled house in Hungnam.

The house, small but good by Korean standards, stood on a street corner in the shadow of a great yellow-clay bluff. The Army marked it for destruction to provide a clear field of fire for the guns of rearguard defenders of American units retreating out of North Korea.

Four people lived there, husband, wife, small daughter and grandmother. Their house was one of several to be wiped out, and the destruction of the others at first seemed to have had no effect on them.

The mother and daughter watched with apparent unconcern while a bulldozer plowed through thin plaster and lath walls of a nearby house which came down in a tangle of splinters and a great cloud of foul-smelling dust.

Then the bulldozer crawled through the debris to the house on the corner, halting with the bright blade against the east wall while the American driver shouted to a South Korean interpreter to clear everyone from the place.

The little girl understood first, and screamed.

The driver halted the bulldozer and shouted, "Hubba, hubba!" He leaned back and lighted a cigarette.

The little girl raced to her mother. The interpreter swiftly jabbered instructions for the family to leave at once.

What does a family take from a house which is to be destroyed immediately? A house that represents a lifetime of work and savings and a place in the community.

This family took simple things: a few cooking pots, a whisk broom of rice straw, sleeping mats and bedding, several rolls of the kind of white paper that orientals paste over doors and window frames, a steaming pan of a yellow, reedy mixture-like straw—that had been cooking on a charcoal pit.

The mother, obviously dazed, carried a wide, shallow pottery dish of grain to the door and dropped it. The dish broke and the grain spilled. Her first tears came.

The little girl had stopped crying now and was working swiftly

4 of 10 Families Are 'Worth' $5000

By The Associated Press

About four in 10 American families had a net worth of $5000 or more early in 1950, the Federal Reserve Board reported last night.

Nearly one in 10 was worth $25,000 or more.

Net worth was figured by taking the value of Government bonds, bank accounts or other savings accounts, homes, farms, real estate, securities or business interests and deducting from the total of assets the total amount of debt owed.

The Board said about half the Nation's 52 million "consumer spending units"—mostly families living together and pooling incomes, but also some individuals living alone—owed no debts at all when the survey was made some months ago.

Being debt-free doesn't mean much in itself. The Board found that people with lots of assets usually have debts, too, and the tenth of the population with highest incomes owed about one-fourth of the 65 billion dollars total of consumer debt.

The board itself rated its figures on family solvency as cheery, since it had earlier reported that one-third of the Nation's families overspent their incomes in 1949—when prices were lower than now.

Among the families that overspent income last year, six in every ten still had a net worth of $1000 or more in early 1950, it reported.

Homes usually represented a "substantial proportion" of consumer assets. About one-third of the families with an annual income of $1000 to $2000 owned a home—a high proportion reflecting the fact many retired people own homes—and two-thirds of families with incomes above $7500 were home owners.

About 21 million nonfarm families owned their own homes, although nearly half of them still owed on a mortgage or some other type of house debt.

"About half of the spending units having incomes of less than $1000 value their homes at less than $5000, and only about a tenth of this income group value their houses at $10,000 or more," the board said.

"About three-fourths of the spending units with incomes of $7500 or more value their homes at $10,000 or more. Over a fourth of this higher income group value their homes at $20,000 or more."

Slightly more than half of all the families—or spending units—owned autos, and one in each 25 owned more than one car. Car ownership ranged from one in five among families with income under $1000 to nine out of ten with incomes above $7500.

Corporate stock ownership was less frequent—only about seven out of 100 families had common or preferred stock in corporations open to investment by the general public, the board said.

Sparkman Deplores Failure to Curb Steel Prices, Wages

Senator Sparkman (D., Ala.), said yesterday the Administration apparently "muffed the ball" and contributed to inflation by failing to intervene when the steel industry recently boosted wages and prices.

"Steel is basic to the entire economy and wage-price increases in that industry almost always set off a chain reaction of increases in other fields," Sparkman told a reporter.

"In my opinion the Government should have stepped in, as it did later when the automobile industry raised prices, and said: 'Not so fast. Let's study this whole situation before you go ahead with those increases.'"

The November steel price hikes came after United States Steel and other firms granted a wage boost to the CIO steelworkers.

Alan Valentine, director of Economic Stabilization, told Congress last week his agency did not move to halt the steel increase because it was just getting organized and had no staff at that time.

It did act in the auto industry case this month because things had reached a point where something had to be done, Valentine added.

The Stabilization Agency first asked Ford and General Motors to rescind price increases for 1951 model cars. When the companies refused, the Government clamped price ceilings on new cars at December 1 levels. That wiped out the increases.

A few days later, auto industry wages were frozen until March 1.

Sparkman said the steel increases were probably a major factor in the move to boost auto prices.

"The action regarding steel also probably will push up prices for farm implements and that increase will in turn push up prices for farm commodities and eventually the cost of food," Sparkman declared "that is just an inllustration of the repercussions in one field."

On another subject, Sparkman said he agreed with Senator Humphrey (D., Minn.) that Congress ought to do something about curbing commodity speculation.

Humphrey said in a weekend interview that "scandalous" commodity speculation is adding "billions of dollars" to the cost of the defense program.

Sparkman called it "a very complicated problem" which should be given immediate study by the appropriate congressional committees. Humphrey demanded that the new Congress convening next week grant President Truman power to bring the commodity exchanges under Federal control.

Tenth Corps Ready For Another Fight

North Korean army invaded South Korea.

The North Korean invaders were smashed back and scattered, and just one month ago United States Tenth Corps troops stood on Korea's northern border facing Red Manchuria.

Today, however, no United Nations forces remained north of the thirty-eighth parallel, the old north-south frontier that split Korea in half.

The vast armies of Communist China had intervened, forcing the United States Eighth Army in the west into a hasty 120-mile retreat, and missing destruction of the Tenth Corps only because of the historic beachhead withdrawal.

Reds 21 Miles from Seoul

Today the Red invaders had edged within 21 miles of Seoul, the southern capital, in the preliminaries of an all-out offensive. They had threatened to launch it on Christmas Day, but it failed to come.

The Tenth Corps withdrawal, applauded by President Truman as "the best Christmas present I could have," was made in 14 fighting, freezing days and nights.

For two solid weeks the thrusting Reds were held at bay by naval guns, planes, artillery and determined doughboys while 109 naval vessels completed the unprecedented, orderly retirement. They took their weapons and vast stores of supplies with them to fight again in South Korea.

U. N. commanders were jubilant at extricating five combat divisions—the U. S. First Marine Division, the U. S. Third and Seventh, and the Republic of Korea (ROK) Third and Capital Divisions—from the icy wastes of northeast Korea against overwhelming numbers of Communist troops.

Optimism was tempered Christmas Day by the menace of an impending gigantic Chinese Communist offensive in the west.

U. N. troops braced in their icy foxholes Christmas for the blow.

Communist leaflets, air-dropped presumably at night over South Korean positions, had said the Chinese would attack "on Christmas" and urged South Koreans to surrender because they would be outnumbered four to one.

For four days, Associated Press Correspondent William J. Waugh reported, U. N. forces have been in contact with Chinese troops around the 38th Parallel.

9 Prisoners Taken

All through the long day and until 8 p. m. when Waugh's dispatch was written, he said, "the frozen battle-line was ominously quiet except for patrol action." Patrols killed 41 Chinese and captured 9.

General MacArthur's headquarters announced that hostile units of undisclosed size reconnoitered the Sinsan area, only 21 miles north of Seoul. Other Red units were poised from 28 to 32 miles northwest and northeast of Seoul.

South Korean Army headquarters said Chinese Reds "appeared in many places" along the Parallel from the extreme west coast to within 40 miles of the east coast. Since Korea is some 160 miles wide at the Parallel, this would mean the Reds were strung out for at least 120 miles along the prewar frontier.

At this critical juncture, Lieut. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, the new commander of the United States Eighth Army, arrived in Tokyo Monday night by air from Washington. He replaces Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker, who was killed Saturday in a jeep accident.

Walker's body lay in state at his home in Yokohama and later will be buried in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va.

At Seoul—closely menaced for the second time in six months by Red forces—the South Korean National Assembly decided to adjourn. It plans to reconvene next month, "probably in Pusan," a reliable source said.

President Syngman Rhee sadly called upon his government to evacuate the capital as the Chinese forces drew closer.

In addition to the Red units at Sinsan, MacArthur's late Monday war summary pinpointed 1500 Reds in prepared positions at Kapyong, 32 miles northeast of the capital. An attack on Chunchon, 45 miles northeast of Seoul, was halted.

Correspondent Waugh said South Koreans and Chinese battled over possession of a hill in the Sanggorangpo area 28 miles north of Seoul. The Reds withdrew, then later took the lost ground with a force in battalion strength (possibly 500 to 1000 men).

Other Red units were reported at Kaesong, Yongchon and Hwachon, all hubs on roads leading to Seoul.

The last man and last vehicle safely quit the Hungnam beachhead in the northeast at 2:36 p. m. Sunday, General Almond said in his announcement Monday. The withdrawal has been under a close security cloak.

Vice Adm. C. Turney Joy, commander of naval forces in the Far East, said, "The only think we left behind was the enemy."

On the last day, when final rear guard units "walked to the nearest exit" under a saturated curtain of rocket fire from covering ships offshore, not one casualty was suffered, Joy said.

Evacuation Called "Flawless"

The evacuation was termed "flawless" by the Navy. It was completed one day ahead of schedule by ships under the command of Rear Admiral James H. Doyle.

Doyle radioed Joy in Tokyo:

"No one will ever say we were pushed off this beach. It was walk, not run, to the nearest exit. They never laid a glove on us. Naval air and surface power saw to that."

The last to leave were "frogmen"—the plucky underwater demolition teams which wrecked buoys and marking places and left Hungnam unfit for navigation.

The port's loading facilities were smashed when four giant cranes were destroyed. They had helped lift 17,500 vehicles and 350,000 tons of supplies aboard American, British, Canadian and Norwegian evacuation ships.

Day and night, under the menacing pressure of 100,000 Chinese and at least 30,000 Korean Reds, the work of stripping Hungnam base had gone on.

Among the first to leave Hungnam were the First Marine Division veterans of the costly retreat from Changjin Reservoir in early December.

Their commanding general, tough Maj. Gen. Oliver Prince Smith, said his men were "surprisingly fit" and added:

"But they're still mad. They don't like being pushed around.

"I still don't know what we will be called on to do next, but I'll tell you this, the (the Leathernecks) won't be pushed around by Chinese, North Koreans or anyone else."

AP Correspondent Tom Lambert, who has covered the frontlines since the first American troops arrived at the scene July 4, reported the withdrawal was in process as early as December 10.

The great parade of men, vehicles, jeeps, trucks, tanks, he wrote, began when the Marines started embarking the following day, December 11. At the end of the week, the first elements of the Seventh Division were taken aboard ships for the journey south. ROK troops were seaborne earlier.

The United States Third Division remained on the beachhead as the rear guard.

17,500 Vehicles Removed at Hungnam . . .

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

ALL IN TWO WEEKS—Tanks and other vehicles are lined up near the water's edge during evacuation of Hungnam in North Korea. The United States Navy said 105,000 troops, more than 100,000 civilians, 17,500 vehicles and 350,000 tons of supplies were removed from the port

Fighting Men Weep for Joy

Military evacuees were mingled with Korean refugees, he said. So many Korean men, women, and children climbed aboard one LST (snub-nosed landing ship tank) that it settled onto the muddy harbor bottom. Some of the load had to be cleared off to move it.

The Communist horde drew closer each day. The big threat was that the Reds would spring out of the mountains and on to the flat lands which form a narrow apron around Hungnam. If they had broken through, the evacuation would have been seriously endangered.

Instead, relatively light Red forces probed constantly nearer as the Allies moved back.

AP Correspondent Stan Swinton, who also covered the beachhead operation, reported that, "enginers crumbled bridges, wrecked trains and torched buildings with each successive withdrawal to a new line. Most of the North Koreans' shabby frame houses were left intact, but behind the withdrawing U. N. forces was a military wasteland."

Lambert said that toward the end artillery in some cases was wheel to wheel behind the contracting perimeter. Tanks sat in rows and gave gun support.

Flak wagons (antiaircraft guns) were placed on hilltop positions around Hungnam to throw a line of fire on the Reds. Allied planes gave the beachhead constant cover.

But the Reds were unable to break through.

The armada offshore included the battleship Missouri, with her great 16-inch guns, the heavy cruisers St. Paul and Rochester, eight destroyers and the mighty air arm of seven fleet carriers. The task force was as large as many during World War II.

Many Wanted to Stay

They still wore dirty, heavy winter clothing. They were happy to be out of the battle zone, but many of them felt they could have held out on the beachhead all winter and launched another offensive from there in the spring.

The wounded were removed from the rescue fleet to the Swedish Red Cross Hospital where 340 beds awaited them. Trucks, jeeps, ducks, artillery movers and other vehicles removed bore mute evidence — bullet and shrapnel holes.

The assistant division commander, Brig. Gen. Edward A. Craige, who led the First Marine Brigade ashore in Korea, said there never had been a moment, "including right now," when the Leathernecks were not ready for battle.

In the ranks there were some who were ready to give up Korea, but most of them agreed with Craige.

"All Korea is not worth another American life," said Sergt. Charles E. Gunter, St. Louis, Mo.

"Chinks Can Have It"

"As far as I'm concerned the Chinks can have it," said Pfc. Gussie Taylor, Highlands, N. J.

"We were doing all right against the Chinks and would have mopped the mup proper if we were left alone," said Sergt. L. Smith, Philadelphia. His buddies, grouped round him, nodded approval.

Corpl. Richard F. Wolfe, one of three brothers in the division, acknowledged they could have used "another Marine division or two" but he insisted the Leathernecks should not have been pulled back "until we gave those laundrymen a good lesson." Wolfe and his brothers, Sergt. Walter L. Wolfe, jr., and Pfc. George M. Wolfe live in Bethlehem, Pa.

"I don't like this running from the Chinks when we know we can beat hell outa them," complained Pfc. Robert L. Dillie, Parker, Ind.

Corpl. Lester Smith of Colliston, Ill., said the terse comment of Corpl. Lester Smith of Colliston, Ill.

"Sure we battled our way to the east coast, but that was in the wrong direction," added Pfc. John H. Smith, Leesburg, Fla.

These were the men who were taken from the beach at Hungnam while the Red hordes were held at bay by the curtain of fire and steel drawn by one of history's most intensive air and naval bombardments. And they were the ones who had held the beach when their buddies had been evacuated earlier.

"Give us more Marines and more equipment and let us fight on," was the terse comment of

His corps, he said, abandoned none of its wounded, none of its weapons, none of its supplies or equipment.

"We met," he said with quiet pride.

War Tumbles Family's World—for Nothing to carry as many things as possible from the house. It is rare for a child's face to harden, but her face did.

The husband and a friend carried out the grandmother, an old woman with clawlike, veined hands and a filthy tangle of gray hair. She could not walk, and obviously did not know of the fast-approaching fate of the house.

The mother took up a gourd scoop and began dipping golden millet from a huge brown jar. Then suddenly she must have realized the enormity of what faced her family. She broke into great, wrenching sobs.

An American soldier, holding the straw bag into which she was scooping the millet, tried clumsily to console her.

The child wiped her nose and eyes with hands which were blue with cold.

A correspondent offered her candy, but she struck his hand away sharply.

A sergeant drove up in a jeep and talked briefly with his man on the bulldozer. He went back to his jeep and turned up a radio full-blast. The yowl of a hillbilly song drowned out the sobbing of mother and child.

"Whatta they crying for?" the sergeant asked. But he did turn down the radio.

Then orders came suddenly for the bulldozer to halt work for the day. The family thus won a night of reprieve, but continued carrying things from the house—a streaked mirror, a cheap vase, more bedding and food.

Early next morning the bulldozer knocked the house down.

At mid-morning the mother, dry-eyed, stood on the flattened roof, turning with a shovel the dirt around the edges in hope of finding something forgotten the day before. She had piled a few things at the roadside.

She watched a little boy busily sifting grains of rice from the ground around the house, blowing the dust from each grain and then putting it carefully in his left fist.

She looked at the budozer, snorting on the mound of debris that had been a house, then slowly she looked behind her.

She saw a neighbor dart off with a stick or wood she had placed carefully on her small pile of belongings.

The mother shouted accusingly and then in despair, wept aloud. The little girl came to her, consoling.

They both were crying when a grimy army captain strode up, looked at the destruction and barked, at the sergeant:

"I just wanted a fire lane, not a bunch of rubble!" Two days later the U. N. forces abandoned Hungnam.

Reds Charged With Inciting To Atrocities

TOKYO, Dec. 25 (U.P.) — Gen. Douglas MacArthur charged today that recent "vicious" Communist propaganda broadcasts are "openly inciting" Red guerillas to the atrocity-murder of American prisoners.

The statement referred directly to Chinese and North Korean propaganda broadcast by stations in Peiping and Pyongyang. It made no mention of Russia.

The special communique issued by MacArthur's headquarters said, "The trend of recent Chinese and North Korean broadcasts is . . . an inferential admission that we are not dealing with a transient 'volunteer enterprise but the calculated deployment of every military and political resource available to the Communist high command to achieve a global ambition."

The statement noted some American and South Korean prisoners have been released by the Chinese Reds, "apparently to offset 'the wanton killings of American prisoners with their hands tied,'" but pointed out that "the Pyongyang radio is now openly inciting the guerillas to continue this barbarous practice."

Chinese Say U. S. Planes Bombed in Manchuria

LONDON (Tuesday), Dec. 26 (AP). Peiping newspaper reports relayed today by Moscow radio said U. S. planes bombed and machinegunned Chinese territory.

The report said five American planes machinegunned the Changpai district in Antung Province, dropped bombs and wounded a peasant.

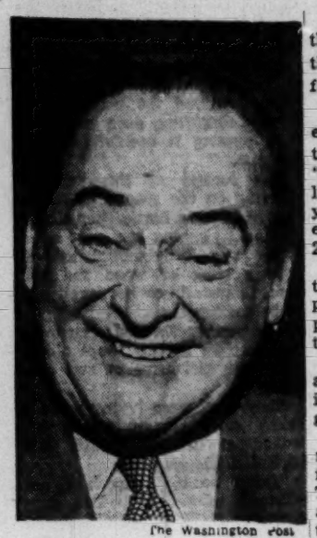
Edward Arnold Loses Girth but Keeps Mirth



The Washington Post

EDWARD ARNOLD
. . . opens new play here

Edward Arnold, the actor of the Santa Claus belly laugh and the ample girth, still has the guffaw but he's losing its source.

The screen's perennial portrayer of fleshy tycoons arrived in town a couple of days before "Apple of His Eye"—his first legitimate stage appearance in 18 years—opens Tuesday at the Gayety, and admitted the loss of 25 pounds—doctor's orders.

He tightened by a notch or two the belt that held up a pair of powder-blue trousers and explained that "tycoons don't have to be heavy."

This was accompanied by the authentic belly laugh, undiminished by a slight touch of laryngitis. Nothing serious, he said.

Washington, which last saw Arnold on the stage 25 years and a few pounds ago, will see him Tuesday, not as a tycoon but as a middle-aged farmer vying for the hand of his young hired girl.

Last summer while touring with a summer stock company of "Apple of His Eye," he decided to continue with the show on a full-time basis.

He noted some changes in the theater since he first appeared—the date momentarily evaded memory. "I was with Ethel Barrymore in 1910—before that I was in a show with—lessee—God, he's an old man now," Arnold grimanced.

The date arrived at was around 1905, give or take a year. He was pretty young then, he added.

Among the improvements in theatrical work since those days is money. "They even get paid for rehearsals now," Arnold said. This led to a question from Arnold to Thomas Hammond, producer of "Apple of His Eye."

"They bring my dough down?"

Hammond, an assured young man in a blue suit, assured Arnold they had. The amount in question was $37 rehearsal wages paid each member of the cast.

At about this point, someone passed around the Christmas card Arnold is sending this year, a reprint of a New Yorker cartoon showing two bobbysoxers talking as they emerge from a movie house. The caption: "So, O. K., the Gregory Peck type is cute, but did you ever notice it's the Edward Arnold type that has the money."

His present show, after its Washington run, moves across the country next year. Arnold expects a good house in the smaller towns. On his travels, he said, he always sees his name at the top of the marquees in the small towns.

He's fond of Hartford, Conn., where they "bill me as Mr. Edward Arnold."

In Juarez, Mexico, he was once called El Presidente. Though most people associate him with the Mr. President radio program, he said, there are those who still call him Diamond Jim Brady for the 1934 motion picture.

"It's nice to be remembered so long."

SECURITY—From Pg. 1

Self-Employed To Get Security

form covering the S. S. deduction.

The salesmen and commission drivers will come under Social Security as the result of a broadening by Congress of the interpretation of "employe."

Included in Group

Included in the group are full-time life insurance salesmen; full-time traveling or city salesmen (not house to house men) taking orders for goods from retailers, hotels, wholesalers and contractors; agent-drivers and commission-drivers distributing meat, vegetables, fruit, bakery products, beverages (other than milk), or laundry or dry cleaning service.

Here are some of the problems:

Q. As a self-employed person, what should I do about social security?

A. Apply for a Social Security number at any postoffice or field office of the Social Security Administration. Pay the tax as part of your income tax next year.

Why Should I Pay?

Q. I am self-employed, but I don't intend to retire at 65. Why should I pay social security when I can't get any benefits?

A. If you die prematrely, your wife and young children will be eligible for monthly benefits, and even if you never retire, you can receive benefits at age 75 regardless of your earnings. Also, your health may force you to retire at 65.

Q. What happens to contributions made before I become self-employed?

A. These will be added to your Social Security account and will help establish eligibility for benefits.

Q. Why do self-employed persons need Social Security coverage?

A. Social Security Administration reports only about one self-employed person out of five has any supplementary income from savings, and most of these receive less than $500 annually from that source.

Q. How do salesmen receive Social Security protection?

A. Apply for Social Security number and show this to the employer.

One On the Aisle

Poor Old Boston, Home of the Clod

By Richard L. Coe

I AM FREQUENTLY of opinion, and disturbing it is, too, that reviewing movies should be the job of very young persons. For certain pictures no one over the age of 8 and perferably of a very dim memory.

This ideal watchman would be exercising his typewriter over the charms of the Warner's Yule tenant, a Technicolor musical called "Let's Dance," wherein Fred Astaire and Betty Hutton devote their talents to convincing you that Show Business is something to be preferred over Back Bay Boston.

While I won't go so far as to bicker with this eternal set-up, I do sense rather strongly that being a few months beyond the aforementioned age, this is a lesson in which I have been too firmly grounded to pay fascinated attention.

And so my mind wanders into the dazzling emphasis with which such ancients as Fred Astaire, Lucille Watson, Roland Young and Melville Cooper illustrate the abysmal sterility of our northern Athens and the contrasting productivity of New York night clubs. How, I marvel, they do enter into it, these valiants not one of whom is under 50. Fred, the eternally bright young man, Lucille and her legal advisers, battling, so earnestly and for so staggering a fee, the stacked game of fooey-on-Boston.

Miss Hutton, whose specialty of cockeyed songs is permitted to intrude only three or four times, spends her time earnestly spiriting away her warborn son from the family of her deceased pilot-husband. Betty skids down a rose trellis to whisk her offspring from the Back Bay manse, Betty all but starves in New York's Show Business, Betty innocently sleeps in a bath tub when her old USO partner, Astaire, falls asleep after telling her young son a bedtime story. All these hardships are nothing to Betty. It's all worth it, oh, my, yes, to get away from talk of Groton, Harvard and The Symphony.

What one comes to see, of course, and that especially goes not only for our ideal 8-year-old reviewer with no memory of things past but also your humble servant, are the stars in action.

At Last Some Songs

So they give us Betty singing "I Can't Stop Talking About Him." and "Tunnel of Love" at the beginning and end of the adventure and they give us Fred in one of his brilliant inventive dances and the two of them doing a Frank Loesser comedy spoof, "Oh, Them Dudes." At such points one relaxes, glad that Paramount possesses Hutton and Astaire, Loesser and Technicolor.

But, oh the sheer pain of hearing about the heart of the simple chorus girl from Montana, the golden souls under the brass of Broadway and the cold, frigid rectitude of Boston. What Maurice Zolotow's original story was like I know not, but Allan Scott's adaptation and Dane Lussier's "additional dialogue" surely add nothing to Boston's tattered name.

No Bostonian I. Just a weary eight-and-a-half-year-old with a memory of the Adamses, the Peabodies, the Channings, the Reveres, "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," "The Late George Apley" and what have you.

But I do marvel at the zeal with which all hands go after this shorn tale. This, truly, is one of the wonders of movie-making.

MOLLY LYNN takes cheerful issue with this column about "Alice in Wonderland" at Arena Stage, where it resumes tonight . . . Mrs. Lynn found the performance "quite in the spirit of Carroll's dream country. Moreover, I was in the company of the most ardent Hopalong Cassidy and Howdy Doody fan, my daughter, age 5. I was especially observant of the young people around me, who seemed to have left their tommy guns and cowboy boots behind on a doorsill for the evening . . . Imagine being able to touch the scenery and say 'Hi!' to the white rabbit!"

ANOTHER children's performance will be starting its ninteenth Washington season Thursday when the Clare Tree Major Children's Theater of New York moves into the Hotel Washington for a morning and afternoon performance . . . The play is an adaptation of John Ruskin's "The King of the Golden River." . . . Seats now at the Book Mart, 820 F st. nw.

OPENING TONIGHT: Edward Arnold starts a nationwide tour in "Apple of His Eye," the comedy by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, at the Gayety.

Withdrawal At Hungnam Seemed Dull

LEAVING HUNGNAM, Korea, Dec. 24 — (Delayed — (AP).—The withdrawal had been proceeding for many days until it seemed dull to witness, at least on the surface.

The Marines went first, and we were glad to see them go after their terrible ordeal in the north.

Then the South Koreans left; and after the the United States Seventh Division, which also fought its way out of the mountain trap.

They went in a long series of truck columns, winding into the wide-flung jaws of tank-landing ships; in a long series of men shuffling down to the beaches or docks at night under spotlights; in a thousand whines of winches, lifting equipment aboard the freighters sharing the harbor with slender destroyers and the heavier bulks of cruisers.

Then came the last night, with only United States Third Division troops on the perimeter. The withdrawal was at its climax.

The perimeter line was distinctly thin now. I tran through the city of Hungnam itself. Artillerymen and Navy gunners stepped up their efforts throughout Saturday night.

Gun Flashes Outshine Moon

Out in the blackness of the harbor, beyond the bright lights festooning the loading transports, warship guns flashed brighter than the full moon. The sullen slam of the explosions rolled ashore past the unblinking red lights on their masts.

West along the beach, self-propelled 155-mm. howitzers roared in angry agreement. Dawn came sluggishly. There had been little sleep because of the funfire and the mounting tension. Carrier-based Corsairs took up their daily task of pounding the Reds to the north.

The artillery went first, the gunners sitting sleeply astride their great weapons as they rolled through the tangle of rusty steel and gray rubble which once had been Hungnan's huge fertilizer plant.

The mortarmen, their setup tubes behind the artillery, remained on the beach.

For the past week the city had been racked by demolitions. And into the sky rose great towers of smoke from explosions set off by the engineers.

Last-Minute Demolitions

Now began the last-minute demolitions inside the perimeter. The explosives factory to the west erupted violently, sending a huge cloud of white smoke curling up into the sunlit morning.

The people of Hungnam, those still here, looked apprehensively to the west. There were not many people left, for thousands had fled earlier. Only last night some 4000 had wound the cold and silent streets into a high-proweed Victory ship, exclaiming with joy as they rounded the final corner and saw the ship.

Why were they fleeing, leaving homes and farms and the graves of their ancestors? For a single reason: fear of the Communists.

Then suddenly they had to make way.

Down from the defense lines on the frozen yellow-clay hills came the withdrawing troops. Their green parkas, field jackets and heavy trousers were stained and mud-daubed from foxholes and gunpits. Their rubber-soled shoepacs or combat boots made only shuffling sounds on the dusty streets.

Tomorrow—'Welcome Chinks'

They were wry or quiet about retreating, or happy to be leaving. One soldier pointed to a 'Welcome U. N.'' sign and swore: "Tomorrow they'll be saying 'Welcome Chinks'."

They marched to the beach, past the mortarmen still firing at the Reds, and into the waiting amtracs or landing craft.

By noon most of the troop loading was done, and Hungnam became quiet. The inevitable unexplained fires had started. A warehouse flamed orange and crackling. In the fertilizer plant a large shed blossomed into a bright ball of fire and was gone.

Navy demolition experts carefully tamped blue canvas-wrapped sacks of explosives into holes drilled along the docks and connected them with bright blue and yellow lengths of fuse.

The last troops came down now from the city. Their boats churned white froth wakes out to the transports.

Fires Crackle, Corsairs Strafe

There was almost silence now, except for the crackle of fires, the distant strafing of Corsairs and the dull slam of warships' guns. Demolition men checked the beaches, found no Americans left and sped by boat to their mother ship.

A moment later the docks shook as the charges were exploded. Smoke climbed through a foundation a flame. The four great hoisting cranes buckled like men struck behind the knee, then crashed with a shriek of steel. Hungnam was almost covered by a fog of smoke and dust.

Over the hills on the north, white signal flares split the haze. They were Communist flares.

Then a destroyer edged in casually toward the breakwater and took the city under fire. Five-inch guns searched for and found a dynamite dump, then raked a trainload of ammunition. Hungnam writhed anew under the explosions.

It was near sunset now, and the transport fleet was under way. The destroyer still fired lazily at its targets. The LSTs bobbed sedately toward the open sea.

Last of all, the destroyer swung its bow slowly toward the sea and left Hungnam to the Communists.

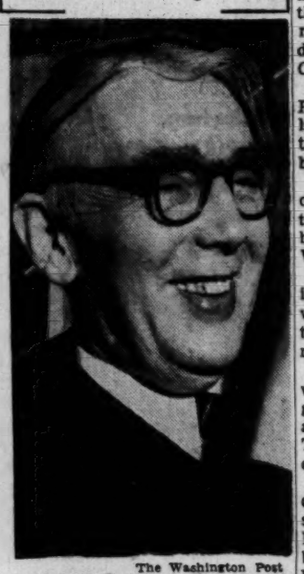
Norwegians Adore Poet Wildenvey



The Washington Post
HERMAN WILDENVEY
. . . Legendary figure in Norway

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

In Norway, Herman Wildenvey is the acknowledged literary giant —a poet, but with the popularity of a movie star.

His poetry readings draw overflow audiences. His style has been imitated by all fledgling Norwegian poets. His life story is a national legend.

"He is a fairy-tale prince in Norway," said Odd Hjorth-Sorensen, press attache to the Norwegian Embassy here.

"He means," said Herman Wildenvy with amusement, "that I belong to the household poetry of Norway."

"If I ask my neighbors in America who Carl Sandburg is," Press Attache Hjorth-Sorensen tried to explain, "there would be some who would not know. But you could not find anyone in Norway who would not know of Wildenvey."

It has been that way with Wildenvey—now 64—since he was 21. He published his first book of poetry at 16 and, by the time he turned 20, was the literary lion of Norway.

But before fame became a part of his life, Wildenvey recalled in Hjorth-Sorensen's Arlington home yesterday, he narrowly missed a military career — in the United States Marines.

Wrecked On U. S. Trip

In 1904, Wildenvey explained, an uncle in Minnesota sent him a ticket to emigrate to America aboard the liner Norge. Off Scotland the ship was wrecked. Seven hundred were killed. Wildenvey was one of the 180 who survived.

His uncle wanted him to enter a seminary in the Midwest. Wildenvey did, but didn't remain there long.

"I wandered around the country. I was as lonely" — Wildenvey smiled—"as Greta Garbo."

So he joined the Marines. "I was going to be a private for four years, then become a second lieutenant. But I became ill and they quickly gave me a medical discharge."

He returned to Norway, to write the more than 30 books—most of them lyric poetry — that to Norwegians ranks him with Ibsen and Grieg.

But there was time for wild oat-sowing.

Last Bohemian

"In a way," an acquaintance wrote of him, "he is the last of the Norwegian bohemians . . ."

Wildenvey and a literary friend, for example, once stole a streetcar on the outskirts of Oslo and drove it to the center of the Norwegian capital. It was all spontaneous—a cold day, they wanted some hot coffee, the streetcar service was lackadaisical, the stretcar was unattended, and that was all there was to it.

Over and above everything else, there was Wildenvey's poetry and his use of new forms for his lyrical material.

Wildenvey's poetry reads a little like A. E. Housman's "Shropshire Lad" approach to nature and life. Wildenvey doesn't deny the comparison.

At 64, he continues to write, trying to consolidate what he has learned about form. In between poetry, there is his marriage to his novelist wife; trips to visit friends—five to America—and extensive reading. He translated Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms" into Norwegian.

Only one Wildenvey book has been translated into English. It's a thin volume, published in 1935, called "Owls to Athens."

HEADED FOR VIRGINIA—Patsy Li, 15-year-old Chinese girl, who was found wounded on the battlefields of Guadalcanal in 1943 and cared for by Marines and missionaries until she could be reunited with her mother, is greeted by Santa as she steps from a plane on her arrival in Los Angeles. Patsy's long desire has been an American education and she is now en route to the Sisters of Mercy of Walsingham Academy in Williamsburg, Va.

quests for licenses had come in from returning veterans, ABC Board Chairman Alan W. Payne said. The Commissioners kept it on the books.

Payne said he has since changed his mind and thinks the goal of 300 should be kept.

The other board members, Mrs. Agnes K. Mason and James Moran, expressed no opinion on the 300 figure. But they said they thought the ban on new licenses was meaningless.

If the ban were lifted there probably wouldn't be a demand for more than half a dozen new licenses, Moran said, because the downtown area is well covered and zoning restrictions make it difficult to find new spots in residential areas. He said he thought the chief result of lifting the ban would be elimination of the sale value that existing licenses now have.

There is no indication that such action is contemplated. There are now 388 licenses in effect. At the rate of one revocation in six years the goal should be reached by the year 2478.

TOKYO, Dec. 25 (AP).—United Nations frontline troops looked up from their Korean foxholes this Christmas Day and saw an American B-29 with yawning bay doors.

The load that came tumbling down wasn't lethal. It was books, magazines, candy, cigars, cigarettes and canned beer— Christmas gift to the forward ground troops from the Ninety-first Photo Reconnaissance Squadron.

More than 300 individual items, weighing more than 1000 pounds, were dropped to the troops. All were purchased by members of the squadron.

Scone Stone Is Stolen

work of Scottish extremists, the possibility remained thaat pranksters had removed the stone.

The stone, known to date back at least 1100 years, measures 26½ by 16½ by 11 inches. A large rectangle is roughly outlined on the top. According to legend the stone groans when a rightful sovereign sits on it, but remains silent beneath a conqueror.

England's Edward I brought the stone to Westminster in 1926 from the old Abbey of Scone in Perthshire, where the ancient Scottish kings were crowned. Until today the only other occasion when the stone was moved from Westminster Abbey was in 1657 when it was taken to Westminster hall for the installation of Oliver Cromwell as Lord Protector.

Ancient scribes relate that Scone, the seat of ancient Forteviot, and later of Pictavia, the kingdom of the Picts, acquired the Stone of Destiny when Kenneth brought it from Dunstaffnage castle on Loch Etive, where it lay until taken to England. For unknown generations the Celtic kings kings were crowned upon it at Dunstaffnage.

The British coronation chair itself was fashioned of oak in 1300 by Edward I after he returned from his wars in Scotland with the Stone of Destiny.

On the Stone are these graven words:

"If fates go right, where'er this stone is found,

"The Scots shall monarchs of that realm be crowned."

For centuries, tourists from Britain and overseas have seen the stone.

From their preliminary investigation police surmised the thieves attended a Christmas Eve service, concealed themselves in one of the royal chapels until the early morning hours and then removed the sone from beneath the throne.

Masonry and woodwork were scarred as the sandstone block was dragged away.

Police were searching for a man and woman seen in a small auto near the abbey.

Lancashire County police established roadblocks and examined cars heading for Scotland. A check of hotels and boarding houses in the north was underway.

Excess Profits

The compromise excess profits tax bill, already approved by the Senate and certain to be passed by the House, makes liberal provision for hardship cases. The result of praiseworthy efforts to minimize the unavoidable inequities of this kind of taxation, the revenue yield will fall far short of the four billion dollars requested by the President. As a matter of fact, 600 million of the 3.3 billion dollars that the new tax law is expected to produce is not a tax on excess profits. It will be obtained from an increase of two percentage points in regular corporation tax rates. If the upward trend of corporation profits continues, the revenue take will, of course, be larger.

The incorporation in the conference bill of the Senate's proposal to supplement inadequate returns from taxation of excess profits by an across-the-board increase in taxes applicable to all corporations with incomes in excess of $25,000 is an implied admission that an excess profits tax cannot be relied upon to produce the bulk of the additional revenue from taxation of corporate earnings that will eventually be required, along with other new taxes, to cover defense expenditures. The extra burden of defense taxation should be spread over all business earnings to avoid the inequities, waste and administrative difficulties of excess profits taxation. Moreover, only flat rate increases paid by all corporations (with minor exceptions) will provide adequate revenue and at the same time avoid the confiscatory rates that would have to be applied to produce the same amount of revenue from taxation of a part of corporate profits arbitrarily declared to be "excessive."

Rules Committee

Another attempt to restore the dictatorial power of the House Rules Committee will probably be made when the Eighty-second Congress meets on January 3 to adopt its rules for the next two years. The committee was shorn of a portion of its power by bipartisan adoption in January, 1949, of a provision empowering the chairmen of legislative committees to call up a bill if the Rules Committee fails to act on it within 21 days. The provision has proved itself a most useful one. During the Eighty-first Congress eight measures were brought up through resort to it and all of them passed the House. Moreover, the availability of the 21-day provision forced the Rules Committee to report out a number of bills which otherwise it would probably have suppressed.

Orderly procedure requires some supervision of the House agenda. But it is altogether absurd to permit a mere seven-man majority of the Rules Committee to keep the House as a whole from voting on bills which have already received careful consideration from the appropriate legislative committee. When a majority of the members of the House are ready to vote on a proposition, they should be able to do so. To surrender the authority to call up bills which have already been favorably reported would be to substitute for democratic rule the role of an iron oligarchy.

Lawyers' Loyalty

There appeared to be no cooler heads at hand when the American Bar Association adopted, without debate, at its September convention here a resolution recommending that all lawyers be required to take periodic non-Communist loyalty oaths. But a protest which we hope will be effective has come at last from 25 distinguished members of the bar headed by former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts. Four past presidents of the A. B. A., including George M. Morris of Washington, are among the signers.

The protest declares that the resolution adopted by the A. B. A. convention violates "the American tradition that suspicion of disloyalty shall not be cast upon an entire class or profession upon the chance of catching a few random delinquents." It violates also, of course, the presumption of innocence which is supposed to be one of the foundations of American law—a foundation which we should have supposed that lawyers would be the last to yield.

The protestants attack the resolution on pragmatic grounds. Every lawyer, they note, is required to take an oath of allegiance to the Federal and State constitutions upon his admittance to the bar. Insofar as any oath can do so, this oath of allegiance will serve to exclude from the profession men who are disloyal to the United States. Those who would take the oath of allegiance falsely could scarcely be expected to boggle at the proposed non-Communist oath requirement. As the signers of the protest observe, "the true Communist or supporter of violent and illegal overthrow of the Government will, by the very nature of his belief and illegal acts, swear falsely, even at the risk of disbarment for perjury."

The most objectionable aspects of the proposed oath, in our view, are these: first, that it would invite a rash of perjury proceedings against loyal members of the bar whose honest utterances and past associations might lead the ignorant or the malicious to accuse them of being Communists; second, that it would disqualify on mere grounds of political belief Communists who candidly admitted membership in the party and whose conduct conformed with all the requirements of law, including the McCarran Act. Competence and law-abiding conduct are the only appropriate standards for admittance to a profession. The danger inherent in applying a political test to all lawyers is far greater than the danger inherent in allowing a few Communists to practice law.

Water Resources

Water is the country's most important natural resource—quite literally the difference between starvation and abundance. The time has long since passed when the country could afford a patchwork of water development and use programs dictated more by whim and pork barrel politics than by any consistent aims. The value of the first report of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission is that it focuses on the need pointed out by the Hoover Commission to take stock of our water projects and unify them within a set of national goals. Another virtue is that the adoption of the basic recommendations of Chairman Morris Cooke and his colleagues would require little or no additional Federal money.

Probably the most fundamental of the commission's suggestions is that water projects be multiple-purpose and be approached from the standpoint of entire river basins. The report calls for separate river basin commissions to be composed of Federal and State agencies and to coordinate plans for power development, flood control, irrigation, navigation, recreation and the like. Over these commissions would be a Federal Board of Review which would review and evaluate individual programs in terms of need, benefit and cost.

Interestingly enough, the water commission does not take the Tennessee Valley Authority as necessarily a guide for future organization. Nor does it commend the Pick-Sloan plan for the Missouri Valley, which has had a kitchen-sink approach to satisfy competing agencies. Perhaps the best-grounded criticism of the water report is that it does not dwell specifically enough on the role of local representation in valley resource development.

What is the application to the national emergency? Simply that the procedures the report recommends would cut out the appalling duplication and rivalry between such agencies as the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. The report suggests that projects now underway be completed, but adds sensibly that new construction should be limited to projects conforming with basin plans or required to meet the emergency. This, of course, would not preclude, say, additional power development if that should become necessary; but priority would go to projects that would implement or safeguard present developments.

It will take a good deal more than mere recommendations to bring together the many disparate water programs, and for this reason the report commends itself to action by the President and by Congress. At this time it is more important than ever to end the squandering of resources and money inherent in the present disorganization.

Unified Aid Program

Recognizing the need for a unified foreign-aid program in view of the changes brought about by accelerated rearmament, President Truman has appointed Thomas D. Cabot to head a new agency in the State Department—the Office of International Security Affairs. Mr. Cabot will also serve as chairman of a new interdepartmental committee which will review and coordinate the Government's economic aid and mutual defense policies and programs.

As the Gordon Gray report on foreign economic policies states, the prospective problem of western Europe is no longer "mainly one of obtaining adequate dollar markets, but again takes the form of obtaining sufficient total resources to meet the needs of security and political stability." Yet, without some assistance from the United States, exclusive of military aid, the people of western Europe might refuse to make the sacrifices required of them to build up adequate defense forces. Certainly their efforts to achieve the original objectives of the ECA program, such as free convertibility of their currencies and elimination of discriminatory trade practices, would be seriously hampered if all strictly economic aid were to be denied them by the United States. Consequently, clarification of our foreign-aid objectives is the first essential of any program having the dual aim of improving the economic condition of aided countries and helping them to strengthen their defenses.

The new organizational setup in the State Department will serve as an interpreter, not a maker of policies. Presumably it will try to give purposive direction to the activities of administrative agencies, defining the scope of their operations, and resolving interagency conflicts. Although the coordination of our recovery-defense program cannot be effected by a mere merger of the administrative agencies concerned, the work of unification would be facilitated by making a single agency responsible for carrying out the European aid program, including assistance for European military production as well as Point IV programs, and foreign procurement and development to meet the needs of the United States for raw materials. The ECA is, in our opinion, the logical choice for this assignment, since it has a large staff of experts in Europe and other parts of the world whose experience and knowledge will be invaluable in outlining and executing a modified foreign-aid program geared to present necessities.

General Walker

Irrespective of personal tragedies, the resistance to Communist aggression in Korea must go on. The arrival in Tokyo of Lieut. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway to replace the late Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker emphasizes one of the virtues of the Army system—that of continuity of leadership.

President Truman made the most pertinent comment on the career of General Walker in a cablegram to the general's widow. "He was a soldier," the message said, "a real soldier." It is incidental that General Walker met death in a jeep accident instead of by enemy fire. As commander of the United States Eighth Army in Korea, he constantly exposed himself to danger in trying to carry out his mission with minimum risk to the men in his command. Almost daily he flew over the battle lines in a small, unarmed, two-seater plane to see what the enemy was doing. Tough, determined and untiring, he epitomized the spirit of the men who are fighting for freedom in Korea.

This is no time for final appraisal of Walton Walker's generalship. Apparently his best work was done in the course of retreats, but that in no sense detracts from his achievements, for a successful withdrawal seems to lay heavier demands upon generalship than an offensive. General Walker's shift of the Twenty-fifth Division in two nights from the Kumchon front to the Chinju area is said to have saved Pusan and thus to have averted disaster last summer. What part he played in planning the ill-fated advance in northern Korea just before the Chinese Communists pounded upon the U. N. forces is not yet clear. But the successful escape of the Eighth Army to more defensible positions certainly redounds to his credit.

General Walker may well be remembered as the General Patton of Korea. Having commanded the so-called "Ghost Corps" that spearheaded the advance of General Patton's Third Army across France in World War II, General Walker carried the same spirit and tactics into the Korean campaigns. His controversial "stand-or-die" order when the thin lines of troops were giving way in the first phase of the Korean war is reminiscent of General Patton's statement that any commander who failed to obtain his objective, and was not dead or severely wounded, was not doing his full duty. Along with this hardness in General Walker, however, was a quality of human understanding which caused him to send a warm Christmas greeting to his men shortly before his death and which caused the weeping President Rhee of the Korean Republic to say, "From the first days he set foot in Korea he understood us and we understood him."

General Ridgway is a man of wide experience in battle and military planning. He will take over the difficult and perilous command in Korea with the prayers and best wishes of millions of free men inside and outside of his own country.

After Christmas

There are so many things you're going to do once Christmas is over. Get down to dieting in earnest—in the meantime one more taste of fruit cake won't matter, and maybe one more chocolate out of its frilly container, just to see what the filling's like. Better make the most of that eggnog, too—alcohol's out of the window after the holidays. Say, you've got to take care of yourself, get in shape for—for whatever might happen . . . Money to go to the movies? Oh well, all right, being as it's Christmas, but remember everybody's got to start saving money next week! Think of the taxes around the corner, think of prices, think of what Christmas has cost this year! Think of how little you're saving!

Well, just wait till January. Everybody's going to start pinching pennies around your house . . . Those old magazines? . . . Throw 'em out. You'll never get around to reading those fine pieces you've saved that explain everything. But from now on—at least after the Christmas tree is down and all this mess out of the house—you're going to keep up with what's going on in the world, not let newspapers and magazines pile up on you. You're going to read more books, too . . . What? The Flitterwitt's party? Sure you'll go, but it is positively your last one! You're going to cut out all this running around in circles. Stay home, read, rest—yes and really give some thought to the state of the world. A fine kind of citizen you've been! And with things as they are—oh well, beginning Monday, well Tuesday, at least, you're going to lead an entirely different life.

Perjured Testimony?

Now that the charges against Anna M. Rosenberg have been exploded and their instigators exposed, some stern retribution seems in order. These charges may have been based on an innocent mistake in identity, but there are strong indications that they were deliberately and maliciously contrived by men who knew them to be false. If there was perjury, and subornation of perjury in this case, the full penalties of the law ought to be meted out to those responsible.

Perjury prosecutions of those who have allegedly made false denials to charges that they are Communists are no longer a novelty. It is no less important, although it is much more unusual, to prosecute and punish false accusations. For these present an equally grave danger to society. The agents of communism would have a formidable weapon in their hands if they could with impunity besmirch the reputations of loyal Americans whose skills and experience are vital national assets. Bearing false witness is at any time an ugly business; in the present crisis, it is a peril to national security as well.

Formosa

Because of the great power of the United States in the world today and the knowledge that the peoples of the world look to us for moral, political and spiritual leadership in pointing out a path toward peace, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom would encourage the President of the United States to use his good offices to help break the present impasse between the United Nations and the Peking government.

The President has a great responsibility in this hour because when he spoke on June 27, 1950, giving a policy statement on Korea, he announced that (1) American forces had been sent to Korea; (2) the Seventh Fleet had been ordered to Formosa; (3) military assistance to Indo-China would be accelerated and (4) military forces in the Phillippines would be strengthened.

Because this policy already has tied the question of Formosa to that of Korea, it would seem to us that it is not unreasonable for the United States to make some definite concessions showing a willingness to discuss Formosa, rather than to insist on "unconditional cease fire" on the part of the Peking government. In the light of the tragedy that is facing mankind—and even though Gen. Wu Hsiu-chuan has returned to China—it is not dishonorable or appeasement to patiently and persistently engage in discussion of all possible avenues for negotiation.

Our Nation has a heritage of belief in spiritual power. In this faith we earnestly hope that the President will help open the door to further negotiation by indicating to the United Nations a willingness on the part of the United States to accept discussion of the question of Formosa.

Expanding Economy

Leon Keyserling's defense of his "expanding economy" in his communication December 18 and his goal of 350 billion dollars of "national output" by 1955 contains the statement:

"I have repeatedly urged many anti-inflationary measures, the essential purpose of which is to divert more of our resources away from where they are less needed toward where they are most needed in these critical times. This includes, for example, a tax program heavy enough to take away from business and consumers at least as much buying power as is being poured into the market by total Government outlays including an expanded defense program."

What Mr. Keyserling is saying here, is that we prevent inflation by taking money away from consumers and giving it to the Government to spend on defense weapons and the hiring of personnel engaged in defense. This does not prevent inflation.

"There is no irreconcilable conflict," Mr. Keyserling continues, "between expanding total production and directing it to the most necessary purposes."

The "irreconcilable conflict" in this point of view lies in the fact that when we curtail the production of consumers' goods while we expand the production of defense goods we upset the equilibrium between the velocity with which money enters into circulation as compared with the velocity with which goods enter into consumption.

Inflation has not been stopped by the "anti-inflationary" measures of increased taxes, limiting time payments and the purchase of E bonds which Mr. Keyserling has advocated. Mr. Keyserling continues to preach increased production without apparently realizing that increased defense production, with decreased civilian consumption, unregulated by wage and price controls, while it may reach his goal of 350 billion in "real output" by 1955, will represent not 70 percent "personal consumption expenditures" and 14 percent "Government purchase of goods and services" as it did in 1948, but perhaps 52 percent of the former and 45 percent of the latter as it did in 1944.

U. N. Charter

The United States, Great Britain and France have agreed on the text of a joint note "offering Russia a Big Four Foreign Ministers' Conference provided the Soviet Union agrees to discuss a fixed program of outstanding East-West differences."

In spite of U. N. reverses in Korea, it is obvious that in settling these differences the American people will accept no "shabby deals" with the Russians, the Chinese or anyone else. In fact, unless we are willing to kid ourselves into total disaster, we cannot afford to accept any more settlements on any subject whatever until the terms of the agreements can be strictly enforced.

The U. N. is the logical agency to carry out this enforcement, but at the moment it is too weak militarily and structurally to accept the responsibility. We are in the process of correcting its military weaknesses. Its structural weaknesses can be corrected by calling a Charter revision conference (article 109 of the Charter). If the Soviet rulers sincerely want a permanent peaceful settlement of differences they will participate in this revision conference and will ratify the essential amendments. If they do not want such a settlement, what is the use of further negotiations with them?

First on the agenda of the Four Power Conference, therefore, should be the discussion of a program to be submitted to the U. N. Charter revision conference, and the suggestion of an immediate date and place for the conference, which can then be fixed by a two thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Segregated Farewell

Recently our branch chief in the office of the Quartermaster General was leaving to accept an overseas assignment, and as is often done, he was presented with a scroll and a party was given for him. The scroll was presented for signature to all of the white people in the office first and then when there were some extra spaces left a few of the Negroes were asked to sign. This was unusual because most of the time the scrolls are passed from section to section and signed indiscriminately.

But what really topped the entire affair was the fact that none of the Negroes was asked to participate in the party which was given on Government time! Several the women spent practically the entire day decorating and preparing refreshments without any charge to annual leave, also the people who were attending the party left the office at 4:25 p. m. and we worked until 5 p. m. I understand that each person paid $2 to help with the affair but even so I believe that they were wrong in not asking the entire branch and starting the party on Government time. After office hours I am sure whatever they did would have been their own business.

Defeated Candidates

The theory recently advanced by certain elements of our society that persons like Dr. Frank P. Graham who have been "rejected by the voters at the polls" should not be appointed to responsible Government positions (commented upon by Bill Posey in his letter of December 21) is a sure way of wasting some of our best talent in a period of national emergency.

This theory implies that all political contests are between a hero and a villain. It implies that the winner of the election is a hero who has only good qualities while the defeated candidate is a villain who has only bad characteristics.

Actually, most of our political contests are between relatively good men. If the theory had been generally accepted in the past the rejection by the voters at the polls disqualifies a man for further Government service we would not have availed ourselves of the experience of former President Herbert Hoover to head the Hoover Commission. Nor would we have used former Senator John Cooper on the diplomatic front. I could expand this list at great length of men rejected at the polls who have since done yeoman work for their Nation and are continuing to do so.

We cannot allow ourselves the luxury of permitting partisan politics to remove from useful Government service capable and experienced men like Frank Graham and many others merely because at some point in history they were defeated for a certain position in a political election.

Atlantic Union

I cannot go along with the easy cry to put unity behind our present national Administration.

We can decide to place arms in the hands of the German people, but we cannot make them use those arms unless we put in their hearts a hope worth fighting for. They want permanent partnership with us. In principle, working toward peace for the earth, we want this also. An honest exploration of the possibility can be offered at once by passage of the Atlantic Union resolution.

It is criminal to waste these irrecoverable days as we dawdled away the months from April to December when we left General Bradley waiting with a blueprint in his hand, refusing the bit of sovereignty that he named plainly as a prime essential before our paper defenses could be real. The most vital spot in these European defenses—Germany—still is putty, because of the same stubborn blindness in Washington.

The Senate of Canada, just four days after aggression began in Korea, passed a resolution for the calling of a convention of delegates from the Atlantic Pact countries to explore the possibilities of federal union; for strength for survival and to maintain peace. A similar resolution in the British House of Commons has Winston Churchill's indorsement of its wording. The popular approval that our Atlantic Union resolution wins, under debate, is kindling. What is Washington waiting for—another Pearl Harbor?

"IQ" Deferments

The proposed system of granting draft deferments to technical students with higher than average grades or IQ's may lead to consequences the seriousness of which may have been overlooked. It would set up a class system in which one group would be known as the "morons" and the other as the "intelligentsia." The first would hate the latter and the latter would strut and domineer over the others.

If you were a student how would you like to be branded as one not smart enough to be deferred? If you were normal, you would be deeply hurt, but it might happen to anyone. Such a system could not be administered fairly.

Acheson And Lippmann

A Communication

SENATOR James E. Murray (letter published December 20) is obviously in the wrong league when he undertakes to challenge the latest decision by Walter Lippmann.

The column to which Senator Murray objected, "Mr. Acheson's Troubles" (December 14), only confirmed my faith in the unerring validity of Mr. Lippmann's judgments. For the past few months it has been obvious to such far-sighted thinkers as Colonel McCormick, Mr. Luce, and Senators McCarthy, Taft, Knowland, Hickenlooper, Kem and Jenner that our present Secretary of State has lost the confidence of the people and must be replaced. Mr. Lippmann, after a characteristically long period of deliberation and pulse-feeling, has now joined these gentlemen in demanding that Mr. Acheson's head roll.

With a knowledge of the will of the people which can be gained only after several months' sojourn in Europe, Mr. Lippmann has placed his finger directly upon the reason for the loss of confidence in Mr. Acheson. The Secretary of State may perhaps be a warmonger and a tool of the Wall Street Fascists, as the Communists maintain, or he may be an appeaser, a harborer of subversives and perverts, and a disciple of the Kremlin, as Senator McCarthy and his friends maintain. But Mr. Lippmann, brushing aside these secondary charges, goes to the heart of the matter and declares that Mr. Acheson is an "amateur politician," guilty of making political compromises with his congressional opposition.

WITH the scales thus removed from my eyes, I join my humble voice with the others in demanding that the President immediately accept Mr. Acheson's resignation and appoint a new Secretary of State who can take over the reins of foreign policy at this critical point in our Nation's history, set the country upon a new course, and win the unqualified confidence of the American people.

Being untouched by the heavy responsibilities which burden Mr. Lippmann and the others, I venture to suggest a few qualifications to be met by the new Secretary of State and a few basic rules which he must follow in the conduct of United States foreign affairs.

He must be capable of dealing with his opposition in Congress on a nonpolitical basis. Whether he does this by joining them, convincing them, or incarcerating them is a matter best left to his own judgment. He must unfortunately be broad-minded enough to tolerate the continued presence in the White House of Mr. Truman, who has foolishly decided that the voters meant for him to be President for four years.

He should denounce once and for all the policy of "globalism" or containment, but he must unswervingly oppose any further expansion by the Soviet Union or its satellites. He must vigorously shun all thoughts of appeasement, but he must be realistic enough to admit that the United States is not sufficiently strong to contain Soviet expansionism over the entire world.

He must publicly cancel all commitments which he cannot back up with immediate and overwhelming force, but he must not alienate our allies. He must not be an isolationist, but he must favor building North America into an impregnable fortress before giving any additional military aid to foreigners. He must openly admit that no military force or possible combination of forces can ever hope to hold the Russians along any defense line of the European continent.

IF our European allies show the slightest evidence of dismay or of doubting the wisdom of our leadership, he must immediately cut them off without another penny, soldier, airplane, gun, tank or ship. On the other hand, he must not ask questions or make embarrassing demands for concessions of potential new European allies of proven anti-Communist sentiments.

He must give all possible aid to the Chinese Nationalists, and he must prepare Formosa as a base from which a reinvasion of the Chinese mainland can be mounted, but he must not involve us in an all-out war with the Chinese Communists. He must stubbornly refuse to recognize the Communist government of China and, if necessary, he must veto the admission of that government to the United Nations.

At the same time he must be a hard-headed realist in all matters of foreign relations. He must hand all free members of the United Nations an ultimatum demanding complete and unqualified cooperation with any military or political move which we may sponsor, either now or in the future. Failure to comply with this ultimatum would mean that the United States would immediately sever all relations with the United Nations. He should also continue to press for an abolition of the veto in the Security Council.

Above all else, the new Secretary of State should be capable of meeting all of these qualifications and adhering to all of these minimum standards of conduct without resorting to political compromises with his opposition in Congress.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Dewey And Hoover Theories

WITH the speeches by Governor Dewey and by Mr. Hoover, the unavoidable and, indeed, most necessary reexamination of American policy has begun and it should be carried on. After a reverse of the kind we have met in Korea only a dictator might manage to avoid an inquiry and an accounting. In this country it would be very foolish indeed to try to avoid them.

Lippmann

And so the longer Mr. Truman and Mr. Acheson go on evading a deep and thorough discussion with their serious critics, the more vulnerable they will make themselves to their partisan, factional and personal enemies. An honest search for a more successful policy is the only true alternative to the search for scapegoats and partisan advantage.

MR. DEWEY and Mr. Hoover belong, of course, to the serious opposition with which a national policy that the people will support will have to be hammered out on the anvil of debate. Their speeches show all the marks of a quick and predominantly emotional reaction to the Korean defeat. Their speeches are useful chiefly because they are sincere and earnest opening attempts to reexamine our policy. The two speeches are highly theoretical expressions of the two extremes—not of actual policy in the real world but of opinion in men's minds. That two such eminent Republicans should be so far apart on such fundamental matters shows that the issues confronting us are, at any rate, not partisan issues!

The crucial difference between the two men begins with their radically different beliefs about the size of the American Army. Mr. Dewey called for "a swift acceleration of the draft" to bring the Army "to a strength of not less than 100 division, and our divisions are nearly twice as large as Russian divisions." Mr. Hoover, on the other hand, says that "we have little need for large armies unless we are going to Europe or China" and —differing sharply from Mr. Dewey—Mr. Hoover does not wish to go to Europe or to China.

The difference between a big Army and a small Army is the essential difference between the Dewey and Hoover policies. The Dewey policy is the Truman Doctrine carried to its logical extreme. Therefore it calls for the largest possible American Army as part of an immense coalition of armies from Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Turkey, Japan, fighting on a front of about 15,000 miles around the fringes of Russia and China. The Hoover policy is to skip the Army and abandon the Eurasian mainland.

IT WOULD NOT be difficult to demonstrate that each policy is in its separate way quite unworkable. Thus the armed coalition that Mr. Dewey's theory calls for could not be raised, trained and equipped—even if we assume theoretically that everybody in the non-Communist world worked for it selflessly—for several years. What possible reason is there for thinking—even theoretically—that the Russians and the Chinese with their superior armies would permit a coalition able to crush them to be formed near their frontiers? Would we sit still and do nothing for two or three years while well-advertised Communist armies were being conscripted, drilled and armed in Mexico and Canada?

Mr. Hoover, on the other hand, is so disgusted with land warfare that he wishes to tell Stalin to help himself to the mainland of Europe Asia and Africa. Mr. Hoover is prepared to fight only to defend the islands of the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. This withdrawal of our guarantees is a surrender greater than any Stalin and Mao have ever called for.

THOUGH Mr. Dewey and Mr. Hoover have come to diametrically opposite conclusions, the two theories suffer from the same error. Both assume that no part of the Eurasian land mass can be defended unless there is present on the ground a superior anti-Communist army. It leads Mr. Dewey to call for the great coalition of armies, and to feel that all is lost if it is not formed. It leads Mr. Hoover, who is a pessimist about armies, to the conclusion that since Mr. Dewey's armies cannot be formed, all of Eurasia will have to be surrendered.

Both theories overlook the critical difference between defense in each area and defense by deterrent power. There is no reason whatever why we should regard western Europe as lost, why we should treat our solemn guarantee in the Atlantic Pact as now invalid, because we are beginning at last to see that Western Germany and France, both disarmed in the war, both bled white in war, are not able to conjure up out of the void what Mr. Hoover demands, namely "organized and equipped (sic) combat divisions of such large numbers as would erect a sure dam against the Red flood."

THOUGH there should be and can be some German troops in Germany and many more French troops in France, we might as well realize that on the ground there will never be enough combat divisions to erect a sure dam against the Red flood. Western Europe with our help will do very well if it can erect a sure dam against internal subversion, against civil war, against local insurrection and guerilla activity, and can maintain a balance of power between western Europe and eastern Europe.

But as respects Russia, we must rely on our power to deter. This calls for an invulnerable base in North America and a full exploitation of the advantages of our ocean frontiers. It calls for a conservative military policy which rejects exhausting commitments in secondary theater. It calls for the kind of military power which can do two things—which can retaliate effectively against Russia if the Red army marches in Europe and which can deny to the Soviet Union the use of anything it might conquer—say the Ruhr, by destroying it and by keeping it destroyed.

Not everything can be defended by deterrent power especially not a primitive country which is attacked by a primitive army. But western Europe can almost certainly be defended against military conquest if it has become certain that western Europe cannot be taken over as a going concern and that the price for trying is a powerful retaliation.

IT IS NOT pleasant to write in this strain. But to read Mr. Dewey and Mr. Hoover one might suppose that we have not only lost the campaign in Korea, but that we have virtually lost our whole place in the world. It is not complacency to refuse to underestimate ourselves. Our power is greater than these speeches suppose, and our problem is to increase our power effectively in support of a strategy and a diplomacy which is suited to that kind of power.

Army Rejects With Thanks 3 Brothers Aged 10, 11 and 13

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Tom Todd, 10 (left), and his brothers, Bob, 13, and Buddy, 11, read letter of rejection

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 25 (U.P.). The three Todd boys, aged 10 to 13, who wanted to join the Army or Navy because they think Uncle Sam needs "lots of help," were turned down with thanks by the Army today. But they took their rejection philosophically.

"We were pretty sure we were too young," said Bobby Todd, 13. "But we thought we'd ask anyway."

Bobby and his brothers, Buddy, 10, and Tom, 11, had written a letter to the local Army recruiting office. It read:

"Dear sir:

"We want to know if we can join the Army or the Navy. Beside playing cowboy we can do a lot of little things. I think lots of men should join who wasn't in the last war. It's getting bad and they need lots of help. We are three brothers at the age of 10, 11, 13. Buddy, Tom and Bobby.

"The Todd boys.

"P. S.—Don't tell my mother or dad."

The boys got a reply from Lieut. Jack Moyer of the Army recruiting office, who regretted "we cannot take you due to our age regulations."

"There is a lot, however, that you can do," he wrote. "You can help mother and dad at home by taking care of your shoes and clothes so that they will last longer; don't waste food; go to school and be there on time . . . be sure each night to ask God to guide our Nation and our President, and let our forces be victorious.

"I wish to thank you from the bottom of my heart for your effort. You are indeed men with a true American heart and patriotism. On behalf of the recruiting service, again let me say 'Thanks and God bless you.'"

Russians Try To Belittle A-Bomb Effect

MOSCOW, Dec. 25 (U.P.).—The new "Grand Soviet Encyclopedia" said today the United States highly exaggerated the effect of atomic bombs on Japanese cities for war-scare purposes and now is trying to frighten the world with the threat of a nonexistent hydrogen bomb.

The devastation of Hiroshima and Nagasaki was due primarily to the construction of Japanese houses from paper and bamboo, the encyclopedia said.

"The explosions at Hiroshima and Nagasaki caused not so much military destruction as the annihilation of several thousand civilians due to the explosions as well as radioactivity in the human organism," it was argued.

"Thus American propaganda affirming that the atomic bomb can replace other weapons and decide the outcome of war is untenable . . .

"American diplomacy used the Hiroshima and Nagasaki explosions in an effort to frighten other nations with the object of establishing the world domination of American imperialism. But as the result of the firm, consistent peace policy of the Soviet Union American atomic diplomacy has proved a fiasco."

Now, the encyclopedia said, American scientists are making further attempts to frighten the world with the prospect of the hydrogen bomb. This, it said, would fail as did American belief that only the United States possessed the atomic bomb.

This is the third volume of Russia's "Grand Soviet Encyclopedia" covering the items from "Arizona" to "Ajaccio." In all, 76 pages of text and illustrations were devoted to atomic subjects.

Reviewing the history of nuclear fission, the article said scientists of many nations, including Russia, contributed to research.

The United States first manufactured the A-bomb while the Soviet Union bore the brunt of the war against Germany, the article said that ever since then the tary necessity for the A-bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and sai dthat ever since then the United States had used the A-bomb—but unsuccessfully — for "international blackmail."

As regards the effect of the A-bomb, the article said only 31 of 211 prisoners were killed in a jail 800 meters (2624 feet) from the explosion center.

Trial Slated For Hangman Of Buchenwald

FRANKFURT, Germany, Dec. 25—(U.P.).—German officials are preparing to try Martin Somer, "hangman of Buchenwald concentration camp," for some of the worst atrocities perpetrated during the entire Nazi regime, it was announced today.

We are going to try him as soon as we finish trying Ilse Koch," Bavarian State prosecutor Hans Ilkow said. "Some people wanted us to try them together. But that would have been a mistake—even Ilse would have looked like an angel beside this man."

Somer, a former Nazi SS sergeant, was perhaps the most notorious of all murderers and torturers to the 50,000 prisoners in Buchenwald camp. Apparently he became too notorious even for the Nazis. They arrested him in 1944 for "excessive cruelties."

Somer was in jail when the Nazi world started to collapse and he was impressed into service as a tank driver. The Americans driving into Bavaria early in 1945 blasted his tank to bits. One of his legs was blown off, one arm was shredded, and his body was pitted with steel fragments.

While war crimes agents were seeking "the hangman of Buchenwald," the Americans unwittingly nursed Somer back to life. As an SS man he was automatically interned. But in 1948, nobody ever having accused him of any crime, he was handed to the Germans, still a physical wreck. The Germans put him into one of their best hospitals, themselves unaware of his identity, and spent thousands of dollars to keep him alive and patch him up.

A few months ago Somer's wife came to western Germany from the Soviet zone, asking to see him so she could arrange a divorce. His identity was disclosed. Prosecutor Ilkow hastened to the war veterans hospital at Bayreuth, where Somer was a patient.

"Sure, I am the Martin Somer of Buchenwald," Somer admitted. "Nobody ever asked me before or I would have admitted it. I only did what I was ordered to do."

Adenauer's Call

Germans Get Plea to Stand With West

BONN, Germany, Dec. 25 (U.P.).—West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer appealed to Germans for the first time today to be ready to fight on the side of the West against Communist aggression.

In a Christmas address broadcast through western Germany, Adenauer warned that the peace of the world is "gravely endangered."

"A great part of the world opposes the ethical and spiritual principles of Christianity and has formed a political power which threatens the peaceful and freedom-loving nations and wants to replace justice and freedom by force," the 74-year-old chancellor said.

"In this situation, even the peace-makers should assemble their powers and make their hearts ready for the defense of their most vital goods of life the threat of attack.

"It is the natural right of the individual as well as the nations to maintain and secure the chances to survive.

"It would be irresponsible if the German Federal Goernment would not be ready to stand up in community with the other peace-loving nations."

The broadcast was the first appeal Adenauer has made personally on German re-armament, the issue that cost his party heavily in recent elections in three West German states.

His statement also came on the eve of talks between former Wehrmacht generals and Allied authorities on inclusion of west German soldiers in the Atlantic Pact army.

"All parties which want to maintain and support this State should always remember that a nation must stand together in times of emergency," he said. "I do hope and wish that my concerns are unjustified and that the responsible statesmen will be able to maintain peace and prevent war."

Adenauer also told West Germans he still hopes for reunification of Germany, provided free and democratic elections can be held.

It was his first, if indirect, public reference also to the two proposals within the last month by East German Red Premier Otto Grotewohl for East-West German talks leading to German unity.

Western diplomatic and military leaders, responsible for building a European defense army including German units, admitted today serious concern over the "hellishly effective" Soviet efforts to sabotage their plans.

Moscow, these sources are convinced, is using the Communist East German government to weaken the will of West Germans to defend themselves or take in defense of western Europe.

Adenauer's government has indicated it will sound out East German intentions—insisting always on free and secret elections—before dispatching a formal reply to Grotewohl.

'Ike' Picketed In German Arms Protest

DENVER, Dec. 25 (AP).—Protesting the proposed rearming of Western Germany, three Denver housewives today picketed the home where Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower is spending Christmas.

The picketing, by two women of the Jewish faith and one Christian, was brief and orderly and was attributed to fears that rearming of the Germans might restore Nazi policy and lead to slaughter of countless Jews.

Seeking an audience with the military leader who is charged with shaping western Europe's defenses against Communist aggression, the women marched in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Doud, Eisenhower's parents-in-law.

The placards they carried read: "We have not forgotten Lidice, Buchenwald, Dachau, Maidenek." (These references were to the Czech village of Lidice, wiped out by the Germans in World War II, and to three of the more notorious of Nazi death camps.)

"A Nazi army will not bring peace."

They identified themselves to reporters as Mrs. Lee Wood, Mrs. Baila Lindenauer and Mrs. Susan Clute, all of Denver. They said they greatly admired Eisenhower but fear rearming of Germany.

Through one of the military policemen guarding the home, General Eisenhower relayed word to the women: "There is nothing I can do. As commander, I will merely follow instructions."

Tito Deputy Warns Russians It's Last Victory That Counts

BELGRADE, Dec. 25 (NYHT).—Yugoslavia's Assistant Minister of National Defense deprecated today the "cheap victories" of the Soviet bloc in Korea and warned Russia it would have to win the last battle as well as the first.

In a speech in Zagreb, the capital of the Republic of Croatia, Gen. Ivan Goshnjak called on the Kremlin to recall the fate of other aggressors including Hitler, who won the first round in a world conflict.

He said the side which is "momentarily winning" in Korea should note that "first victories do not mean that the war has been won and first losses do not mean that it has been lost."

Many aggressor in history did not take notice of this fact, the general declared. He is one of the top men in Premier Marshal Tito's heretical Communist government, being a member of the Marshal's nine-man Politburo.

His address to a large meeting of Croatian Communist Party members was in the same vein as several other Yugoslav leaders who have made unintimidated attacks on the Soviet block in the last week.

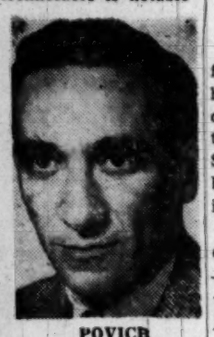
Bassett Heads West Benefit Card

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

ONE WEEK HENCE, the stockholders of the Washington Baseball Club will repeat an annual ritual that has been going on for 30 years now. They will re-elect Clark Griffith as president of the corporation. There never has been an upset in the balloting.

This upcoming annual meeting of the stockholders is notable though. For the first time since he put his Montana farm holdings in pawn to buy a modest share of the club's stock, Mr. Griffith will be greeting his partners as a 51-percent owner and absolute boss of the firm.



POVICH

He never did consider it quite necessary to safeguard his position with majority control in former years. For 30 years he had the complete support of the Richardson family which, like himself, owned 40 percent. And then all of a sudden he felt his position challenged. The Richardson's sold out to John J. Jachym a year ago, and young Jachym wanted in, in an active way.

Jachym was not a partner of Griffith's choosing and the old gentleman bristled, refused to give the new buyer an office in the club, and fortified himself with enough proxies from his friends to freeze Jachym out.

AFTER MONTHS of banging his head against the door in a vain attempt to break down Griffith's resistance, Jachym sold out, although not before the six-month period that would enable him to take a nice capital gain. The buyer was H. Gabriel Murphy, warmly welcomed by Griffith, particularly when Murphy sold him enough shares to jack up Griffith's control to the all-important 51 percent.

Murphy's reward was a salaried vice presidency, the same post that had been denied Jachym. Murphy represents the first permanent change in the club's official family in nigh onto 30 years, and long ago made plain that "I am a Griffith man." Unlike Jachym, Hefty Stockholder Murphy is content to let Mr. Griffith run the show.

The next change in the Washington baseball organization, dating from the time when Griffith may find his duties as president and generalissimo too arduous, will probably bring Bucky Harris into the front-office picture. Griffith used to call Harris the "best manager in the business." Lately he has been saying as well, "Harris has sound business judgment."

WHEN GRIFFITH was dickering with Lou Boudreau before Boudreau signed with the Red Sox, he offered the ousted Cleveland manager a two-year contract as a player. At that point, Boudreau was also weighing an offer from the Yankees, and inquiring of all three clubs what his future might be with them at the end of his playing days.

Griffith held open to Boudreau the high possibility that he would be given a contract as the Washington manager, which meant that he already was thinking of Harris in terms of the front office. The Harris-Griffith relationship has been a fond one, anyway. It wasn't strained even on the two occasions that Griffith found it expedient to release Harris as the Washington manager. Harris always carried away with him the assurance that he could stay on the club's payroll in another capacity.

With an eighth-place team a year ago, and placed squarely on the spot with the stockholders by Jachym's intrusion, Griffith turned desperately to Harris, asked him to come back to Washington from the Coast League. The lucrative Cleveland job was also opening up for Harris, but he returned to Griffith and lifted the old gentleman's cellar-team into fifth place last season.

GRIFFITH HAS DEFINITE first-division aims for his ball club in 1951, but at this moment he has another and more immediate goal. He wants to foil the St. Petersburg plot and get Happy Chandler re-elected baseball commissioner. Griffith is leading the fight for Chandler, and could be scarcely less stirred if it were a holy cause.

He's having success, too. Two weeks ago, an over-turn of three votes in the balloting was required to re-seat Chandler, but at this time the pro-Chandler forces are within one vote of winning, and they expect to have the ballot secure before the decisive February 3 meeting of the club owners in New York.

The re-seating of Chandler has now been accepted as a personal challenge by Griffith who has declared that the come-latelies among the big league owners who tried to vote him out ought to be put in their place by the solid men of the game. To that end, Griffith will interrupt his Florida vacation in February to travel to the New York meeting and thunder in Chandler's behalf.

40,000 See South Stars Win in Last Minute, 14-9

By Gene Plowden

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 25 (AP).—A fighting South team came from behind and smashed over a touchdown in the last 45 seconds tonight to beat the North, 14 to 9, in the Shrine's third annual charity football game before 39,132 spectators in the Orange Bowl.

Dean Davidson of Vanderbilt climaxed as thrilling a game as the stadium ever saw when he burst through right guard for the touchdown that put the South ahead after the North had forged in front, 9-8, with a third-period outburst.

Pat Field of Georgia tried for the conversion but failed. It was blocked by Herb Agocs of Penn.

The "Rebels" coached by Miami's Andy Gustafson and Georgia Tech's Bobby Dodd, rode to victory on John (Model T) Ford's accurate passing. Ford, of Hardin-Simmons, hurled needle-threading passes into the arms of Duke's C. P. Youmans, Mississippi's Bill Stribling and Missouri's Gene Ackermann.

The Army backfield of Jack Martin, Jim Cain and Gil Stephenson put the North back into the ball game in the third period. Jim Janosek of Purdue blocked Fields' punt and the ball rolled into the end zone for a safety. Then the Army backs went into action and smashed over for a touchdown, Martin taking it across on the fourth down.

That tied the score at 8-8 and Dick Steere of Drake converted for the North to put the Yankees in front, 9-8.

The South threatened early in the fourth, but was halted on the one yard line. Carl Taseff of John Carroll punted out on the North's 44 and Bishop Strickland of South Carolina passed to Youmans who made a beautiful catch on the North's five. Two plays later, Davidson rammed over for the score that won the game.

The South dominated play in the first half. The first score came after John Miller of Northwestern fumbled a punt and Bill Bradshaw of Georgia recovered for the South on the North's 43. Ford began hitting Stribling and Youmans with short passes to move the ball downfield.

Mississippi's John Dottley hit center for the final yard. Field missed the try for point and the "Rebels" were ahead, 6-0.

Five successive first downs moved the South downfield in the second quarter but Bob Momsen of Ohio State stopped Ford inches short of the goal line.

Wake Forest's Jim Staton spilled Dick Gabriel of Lehigh in the end zone for a safety and two more points for the South.

Proceeds of the game go to the Mahi Shrine's Crippled Children's Fund. The players, who have been in Miami 10 days, fly to Havana tomorrow for an overnight visit.

Garden Gives Him Release To Appear Here Jan. 4

Lightweight Percy Bassett of Philadelphia, knockout conqueror of Sonny Boy West, who died 22 hours later, will fight in the main event of the West benefit show to be held at Uline Arena January 4.

Al Weill, matchmaker at Madison Square Garden, yesterday released Bassett from a contract to fight the main event in the Garden January 5 to allow Percy to make his appearance here.

Goldie Ahearn, local fight promoter, who is arranging the benefit card, announced the arrangement.

Previously Signed

Bassett's manager had previously been contacted, Ahearn said, and said Bassett would be glad to head the benefit card but that the previously signed contract bound him to fight in Madison Square Garden January 5.

"Then I called Al Weill, matchmaker for the International Boxing Club, and told him our problem," Goldie said.

"He didn't know we were having a benefit show for West's family," Ahearn said.

"He said that he would do anything he could to help, and that he would not only release Bassett from the contract but he would also do everything he could to help the benefit along.

Seek Good Opponent

"Now the next job is to find a top notch scrapper who will be a good match for Bassett. We're going to put on a good show."

In Ring Magazine's annual ranking of the world's best boxers, published yesterday, Editor Nat Fleischer selected Sonny Boy West as the sixth best lightweight and Bassett as the fourth ranking featherweight.

Many top local boxers have volunteered their services for the benefit. Among them are Julian Keene, District light heavyweight champ, District Featherweight King Little Dynamite, Jimmy Cooper, Gene Smith, Holly Mims, Art Bethea, Garland Edwards, and former All Army Middleweight Champ Johnny Pratt.

New Policy Starts

The benefit fight will inaugurate the new District policy of having boxers wear helmets. Following West's death, the D. C. Boxing Commission voted to reinstate the new District policy of requiring the use of the light 8-ounce helmets in all future fights here.

In Fourth Quarter Against Rams

Otto Graham Thought His Fumble Was Fatal

CLEVELAND, Dec. 25 (AP).—Handsome Otto Graham, who led the Cleveland Browns to the National Football League championship, admitted today that he thought their last chance had gone when he fumbled in the final three minutes of play.

"I wanted to crawl into a hole and die," the 6-foot-1 198-pound quarterback said. "I wouldn't have given anything for our chances at that time."

The Browns trailed 28-27 when the ball slipped out of Graham's hands on Los Angeles Rams' 17-yard line yesterday. The Browns came back in the last 20 seconds of play to win the contest 30-28 on Lou Groza's field goal.

Graham has been the Browns' outstanding player since the team was organized in the All-America conference in 1946. He connected yesterday with 22 of 33 aerials for 298 yards and four touchdowns.

"Boy, what a great team those Rams are," he said. "I wouldn't want to play them very often. I can assure you of that. They were definitely up for the game and had a tremendous desire to win."

"Automatic Otto" also had high praise for his passing rival, Bob Waterfield, who completed 18 of 31 passes for 312 yards and one touchdown.

"He's a wonderful ball player, one of the best I have seen," Graham observed.

Although the match was played in 29-degree temperature with a 28-mile wind blowing across Cleveland Stadium, Otto doesn't think the weather had too much effect.

"Of course we couldn't cut as well in running because the ground was hard," he explained. "When we warmed up I thought the wind was going to make passing pretty difficult, but it didn't seem to. I saw just a few of the passes wobble. Perhaps it was just concentration."

It was Otto who made a short run to the right to place the ball in front of the goal posts for Groza's winning field goal from the 16-yard line.

He said that although the Browns have attempted a touchdown, there was no thought of it. "When we got in that position, we knew exactly what to do. It was almost an automatic play to try for the field goal."

And was he nervous about again fumbling as he ran the ball to set up the goal? "There wasn't time to get nervous," he laughed. "Only the spectators can get nervous."

Groza said he felt the same way when he made the kick.

"I was just thinking of fundamentals," he told reporters. "I was going over in my mind what to do. I didn't want to make any mistakes."

Coach Paul Brown of the Brown's calls Groza the "best placekicher in the world" and he modestly takes no credit for his skill.

Bachellor Belle Pays $6.60 at Charles Town

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

CHARLES TOWN, Dec. 25. — Sammy Palumbo, the only jockey here with previous Christmas Day riding experience over the track, came out of semiretirement today and kept Bachelor Belle going long enough to win the St. Nicholas purse.

A crowd of 5000 witnessing the first Christmas racing locally since 1934, saw Palumbo's mount nose out T. W. Smith's Simms with Bobby Gordon up. Third money in the field of seven went to W. L. Curles' Young Scamp.

Not only were Bachelor Belle and Simms locked in a close photo at the end, but they finished in virtually the same order in the betting. The favorite by a margin of 10 cents on the dollar over her rival, Bachelor Belle returned a $6.60 win mutuel.

Luck Favors Winner

Bachelor Belle had to be a bit on the lucky side, however, to take the decision. Palumbo kept the mare close up to a front-running duel between Annie's Dream and Baby Song which resulted in this pair burning themselves out.

When the front runners had enough, Palumbo sent Bachelor Belle to the fore. In the meantime, Simms had plenty of trouble, racing wide early and finally getting in a tangle entering the stretch. In the final drive, Gordon had to weave through with Simms and the -year-old missed getting up by the width of your finger.

Double Pays $254

Bachelor Belle, away from the winner's circle since last September at Wheeling was clocked in 1:26 1/5 for the about seven furlongs over a fast track and under sunny skies.

Daily double stock was high with a $254.60 pay-off being in order on the 8 and 8 combination. Darrell Hartley, who rode three winners on the program, to take the jockey lead here, piloted Dave Robertson's Nina Bravo home in the second race at $27. Vernon Bush won the first event with J. J. McCarthy's Gurner at $6:40.

Mikan Gets 35

Minneapolis Laces Caps By 93 to 79

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 25. The Minneapolis Lakers threw their one-two punch of George Mikan and Vern Mikkelsen at the Washington Capitols tonight and plastered them with their seventh licking in their last 10 games, 93-79.

Mikan tallied 35 and Mikkelsen 22 for 57 of the Laker points.

GET 1ST AD

At the start, the Caps seemed content to try to work the ball into Eddie Mikan, who was paired against his brother George in the hole. For half the period, that didn't work.

The Lakers, playing easy, conservative ball, grabbed a 10-5 lead, so Skin 'n' Bones McKinney, Washington coach, changed the Caps offensive tactics to run-run-run.

"Throw that apple and run," he screamed at his players, and so they did. Two minutes later they led 11-10. It got up to 17-12. And it was 18-15 at the quarter.

Laker Coach Johnny Kundla did some shuffling of his own in the second period, and Freddie Scolari, who had tallied nine points in the first period, became virtually valueless.

Dugan Martin, 5-10 Laker guard, got help from his mates in controlling Scolari's shooting, and so the Lakers tied up the game at 20-20' and then went ahead at 31-30.

Chick Halbert, in holding George Mikan to two buckets up to that point, assumed his fourth foul, and took a rest. Against his brother Ed, George Mikan splurged for five buckets on his next six shots and the Lakers led 46-35 at halftime.

George Mikan's 18 points flash in the second period, however, was overshadowed when the Caps staged a furious rally at the start of the second half.

Scolari, with three buckets, brought Washington up to within 6 points at 57-51, but then the Lakers broke away again. It was 66-58 at the end of the period.

Once again, in the fourth period, Washington slashed the Laker edge to six points at 68-62. That was after Kudelka squeezed in a bucket and a couple of free throws by Dick Schnittker and Ace Maughan helped.

But it got to 74-65 and then the Caps started pressing on defense.

It didn't help. Alan Sawyer got three buckets in four shots, but the Lakers just kept rolling. Maughan's spectacular layup that made it 83-75 was the last Caps flurry.

Ray Robinson Winds Up Tour With KO Win

FRANKFURT, Germany, Dec. 25 (AP).—Welterweight Champion Ray Robinson closed out a triumphant tour of Europe tonight by knocking out Hans Stretz, former middleweight champion of Germany, in the fifth round of a non-title 10 round bout.

It was Sugar Ray's fifth victory —four of them by knockouts—in less than a month of European touring.

The great 30-year-old champion kayoed Jean Stock in Paris, stopped Luc Van Dam in Brussels, outpointed Jean Walzack in Geneva and halted Robert Villemain in Paris last Friday.

Hans Floored Six Times

Robinson floored him six times in the first four rounds and then dropped him for keeps early in the fifth.

It was the first time a reigning boxing king ever had fought in a German ring and Sugar Ray gave the fans a show.

Stretz, eager to make good before the home folks, charged after the champion at the bell with a flurry of blows.

Robinson parried the thrusts, cooly measured his rival, and then knocked him to the canvas. That happened five times up to the close of the fourth.

A few seconds before that round ended, Robinson decked Hans for the sixth time with a right to the jaw. The bell rang with the German stretched on the canvas.

Stretz Goes Down Again

The fifth had barely begun when Stretz went down again. He bobbed right up but ran smack into a hard left and right. This time he couldn't beat the 10 count.

Robinson weighed 157, 10 pounds over the welterweight limit. Stretz weighed 159.

It was the third loss in 36 pro fights for the young German.

Willie Shoemaker Rides Four Winners at Fair Grounds

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25 (AP).—Little Willie Shoemaker had a Christmas party of his own at the Fair Grounds today as he rode four winners in eight mounts to boost his total winners to 371—just two behind Joe Culmone, the Nation's leading jockey.

Culmone rode two winners in five mounts at Tropical Park.

Shoemaker won the feature race, the Christmas Purse aboard Henry Forrest's Traveler. Montana Sands was two lengths behind Traveler to take second place and Magnet was third in the $2500 race.

Traveler paid $4 and $3. Montana Sands returned $7.80. There was no show betting.

Traveler stepped the six furlongs in 1:12 1/5. A crowd of 9000 turned out under a warm, sunny sky to bet $316,081 on the eight horse card.

Shoemaker won the first race aboard Rockwood Lou, the sixth on Traveler, the seventh on Hill Flight, and the eight on Dare Hope.

Culmone had his two winners in seven mounts to make his 1950 total 373. He clicked on Cardev, $9.30, and Dust Screen, $8.80. Culmone began the day leading Willie Shoemaker by four victories, 371 to 367.

Shoemaker plans to fly to Agua Caliente, Mexico, Sunday to finish out the year there and could overhoul the slender Sicilian at the finish. Culmone said he would end the campaign Saturday at Tropical and would not go to Agua Caliente Sunday, when U. S. tracks are idle.

Walter Miller rode only 1,384 mounts in 1906, finishing in the money 887 times. Culmone has been in the money 861 times in 1,628 attempts while Shoemaker had 1,586 mounts and was in the money 847 times.

The score:

Mason-Dixon Race Pits American U. Against Field

Mason-Dixon Conference basketball fans are going to have to wait until 1951 to determine how this season's championship race is going to shape up.

The brief 1950 portion didn't prove a great deal. Five of the 15 colleges remained undefeated, all in two Conference starts.

At the top of the heap starting off the new year are Roanoke, Mount St. Mary's, American U., Hampden-Sydney and Loyola.

However, the real strength still seems to lie with the defending champions, American U. The key players on last year's team are still in uniform.

They include Sherman Webster, leading Conference individual scorer with 50 points in two games. Emerson Johnson of Hampden-Sydney is just a shade behind with 49 points.

But last year's leading point-getter, Nick Scallion of Washington College, hasn't started popping in conference competition yet. In three games outside the conference he's averaged 30 points.

Pope Signs Letter Extending Holy Year

ROME, Dec. 25 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII today signed the papal bull, or letter, extending the Holy Year indulgence to the rest of the world during 1951 as the bells of 400 churches rang out over rain-swept Rome in honor of the birth of the Christ Child.

Text of the bull, written in Latin on parchment and sealed, will not be released until Monday. But traditionally it prescribes the conditions under which the Holy Year indulgence also may be won next year—by visits to certain churches, recitation of special prayers and confession and holy communion.

The Pope, who yesterday sealed the Holy Door of St. Peter's, celebrated midnight mass there last night from illuminated and flower-decorated main altar before 50,000 persons, including diplomats, high church dignitaries and pilgrims from all over the world. A thousand candles and myriad electric chandeliers lit the great church.

The Pope said morning mass in his private chapel in the Vatican Palace today and a third mass there later before he signed the bull. He also received members of the diplomatic corps accredited to the Vatican.

Crowds jammed St. Peter's for Christmas masses and all other churches in the Eternal City were full from the first mass at 6 a. m. to the last at noon.

CAMILLE AFFRE
. . . gets spaniel for Christmas

The spirit of Christmas, in the garb of a little girl in a green dress, came into Camille Affre's room at Georgetown University Hospital yesterday morning.

Patricia DuBois, 12, of 3067 Quincy st., N. Arlington, brought a gift Camille had always longed for—a little cocker spaniel puppy.

Camille, who will be 14 on December 30, has been in the hospital since October 24, recovering from polio, and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Affre of 4805 17th st. N., Arlington say she will be there for several months more.

But it was a double-special Christmas for Camille. Yesterday was also the first time she was allowed to go about in a wheel chair, but not for very long at one time.

As she cuddled the puppy, Camille's eyes were bright and she squirmed all over the bed.

Patty and Camille are classmates in the eighth grade at St. Agnes Catholic School in Cherrydale, Va. Patty's father, Orval L. DuBois, who is the secretary of the Securities and Exchange Commission, raised the little brown and white pedigree cocker. Camille's father is an organization Land Management division of the Interior Department.

Arlington Bank Names Successor to Prosise

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 25 (AP).—Milton R. Morgan will resign this week as director of the Division of Banking of the State Corporation Commission to join the Arlington Trust Company as executive vice president.

Morgan will have full charge of the Arlington bank's operations, it was announced. He succeeds Alan B. Prosise, vice president and treasurer of the bank, who was recently indicted on a four-count charge of income tax evasion.

Morgan, who served six terms in the General Assembly, had been connected with the State agency since 1939. He was formerly president of the Virginia Banker's Association.

Legion Opens 'Tide of Toys' Drive for Foreign Children

The second annual "Tide of Toys" campaign under sponsorship of the American Legion, will open in Washington today, part of a nationwide drive in which 17,000 Legion posts will participate.

Arrangements for use of police and fire stations as collection depots were completed last week, the Legion announced. The toys will ultimately be shipped to children in western Europe, the Philippine Islands and Puerto Rico. The children of veterans now fighting in Korea will also be given toys.

Robert A. Bunch, of 2122 California st. nw., commander of George Washington Post No. 1 and chairman for the area drive, requested that donors observe the following points:

1. Write a personal note of greeting and attach it to the toy. As a result of last year's drive, many American children are carrying on correspondence with new friends overseas.

2. Give sturdy toys that will pack easily. Preferred toys are crayons, picture books, building blocks, balls, and unbreakable and stuffed dolls.

3. Do not send fragile, electrical toys or warlike toys, such as guns, tanks, metal soldiers, and warplane.

More than three million toys were collected nationally last year for European children. This year the Legion has set it sights on 10 million toys. The Legion is expecting to double last year's 15,000 Washington toys during this year's drive, which ends January 20.

After the toys have been collected at police and fire stations, the Yellow Cab Co. will take them to warehouses of the Smith Transfer & Storage Co., where they will created and shipped to Philadelphia. There they will be loaded aboard ships and sent overseas through CARE.

Holdup Man Generous With Victim's Cash

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 25 (AP).—A holdup man here apparently was imbued with the Christmas spirit.

Mrs. Lydia Felly reported he pointed a pistol at her and took two $10 bills from her purse. He hesitated a moment and said: "Here, I'll split them with you." He shoved one bill back at her before fleeing.

First Quadriplegic From Korea Reported

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif., Dec. 25 (AP).—Air Force officials today declined to discuss a Middleburg, Pa., soldier who lost all four limbs in the Korean war.

Local newspaper reports said the soldier, Pfc. Robert L. Smith, arrived at Travis at 8:30 a. m. (PST) yesterday from Hawaii.

The Federal Diary

the personnel office in the Commerce Building.

LONGER HOURS: Central Intelligence Agency officially has ordered longer working hours for its employes. Employes through Grade 11 will be on a 44-hour week, and employes of Grade 12 and above will be on a 48-hour week. Most of CIA's employes have worked longer hours since the Korean crisis without being ordered to do it.

HIGHER CEILING? It's only a matter of time until the President will be asked to raise the ceiling of 150 on the number of top classified jobs in the new defense agencies. The jobs are in grades 16 through 18, and they pay from $11,200 to $14,000.

The agencies had put in requests for about 500 of the high level jobs when the President cracked down with his 150-ceiling order. But his order was issued before the decision was made to speed up the defense program.

Also, the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Office of Civilian Defense have been set up since, and the Economic Stabilization Agency is getting into price and wage problems before many people believed it would. These, and the new defense agencies already in operation, are reported to have requested many more than 150 top jobs.

Meantime, there is considerable employe resentment against the policy of handing out the highest paid classified jobs. Summed up, this is the charge: that Civil Service will approve without question a person from industry for one of the top jobs, but it haggles and fumes and frequently rejects a Government career person who is recommended for one. Why? Because a grade promotion of one or more grades is usually involved.

LABOR'S Apprentice Training Service is being expanded to train defense workers... The President has signed an executive order creating a Federal Safety Council in the Labor Department. The council is to be composed of representatives from each Federal agency and it will advise the Labor Secretary on safety measures for the Government's civilian employes.

JOB NEWS: Federal employment here jumped 3400 to 225,800 during November, and it leaped nationally by 31,300 to 2,160,000. As expected, most of the increase was in the defense agencies... An examination for veterinarian trainees and another for astronomers will be announced soon by Civil Service. At nearby Ft. Meade, Md., tests are open for firefighter, telephone repairman, warehouseman and auto repairman... The Military District of Washington has a test open for equipment repairmen, $1.36 an hour to start.

VETERANS: Those Federal employes who have entered military service or expect to enter it soon, and who are eligible for permanent status, should have their cases acted on immediately by their agencies. Civil Service is anxious to clear them up.

Also, Civil Service has reminded the agencies the order requires eligible employes to be recommended to it for status by March 1. No exceptions are provided although the commission will reopen cases of veterans after their return from military service. What this means is this: Some agencies had better get moving or many of their employes will lose an opportunity for status.

Airtight House Death Inquiry Waits on Tests

The coroner's office yesterday continued investigation of the death of David H. King, 58, retired Justice Department attorney, of 3626 T st. nw.

He was pronounced dead in his tightly sealed home Sunday. King's wife, Beulah, 56, also collapsed, but was revived. She was taken to Georgetown University Hospital, where her condition was described as "very much improved" last night.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said yesterday King had a bad heart, which may have been strained from the lack of oxygen and from the efforts he made to get help. Dr. MacDonald said he will withhold a death certificate pending chemical tests.

Aspiring Young Reporter Gets Some Newspapering Cues . . .

ASPIRANT—Mac Yee, 12, consults with Ferdinand Kuhn, State Department reporter for The Washington Post, as a story comes clicking into the wire room at The Post's new home on L st. "Write as simply and clearly as you can," Kuhn advised the boy, "and avoid purple passages"

THE LAW—District Judge Matthew F. McGuire, a former newspaperman, discoursed with Mac about newspapering and the importance of it to the legal world and vice versa. "Be studious and observant," the judge advised the boy, who is on the staff of his school paper

TYPING EXPERT—Rep. (and Senator-elect) Mike Monroney of Oklahoma gives Mac a demonstration of his typing ability when the Leland Junior High School boy was on a tour of District news sources conducted for him by members of The Washington Post's staff

Mac Yee, 12, Wants a Career As Reporter; Post Helps Out

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Dear Sirs:

I am 12 years old, a student at Leland Junior High School. And I would like to know the qualifications of a reporter when I grow up. Please write, and accept my thanks in advance.

The above letter to the editors of The Washington Post is from Mac Yee, whose other passion besides newspapering is apple pie.

By penning the letter and depositing it in a mail box without any suggestions from the various adult powers-that-be in any 12-year-old boy's life, Mac demonstrated one of the first requisites of a newspaperman, i. e., initiative.

As a writer for the Pine Cone, Leland's journal of events, Mac has also proved himself a minor master of the lucid style, e. g.:

We are studying about maps, the universe . . . In English we are becoming familiar with the Dewey decimal system . . . We then labor over spelling . . . Next comes music . . . At noon we rest our weary selves over a sandwich and some soup . . . Next we have gym, in gym we are taking the fundamentals of football . . . We finish the day with rectangles and circles.

Tour of News Sources

Doing its bit to encourage such reportorial promise, The Washington Post this week took Mac on a tour of some of its chief news sources—including police, courts, Capitol Hill.

For Mac, who lives at the Baptist Home for Children in Bethesda, it was the first look at these interesting spheres—much less at reporters operating in them. He kept his eye on the ready and at the end showed he had absorbed a lot, observing:

"You know, at first I couldn't understand where newspapers get all that news. I sure do now."

Mac is an observant, neat young man, impressionable, yet able to adjust readily to new worlds. In the police press room, he was quickly wielding a phone in the best reporter fashon—cocked, that is, in the crook of his small shoulder.

He is a man of few words, which is not a bad trait for a 12-year-old boy—or for a reporter, who should, however, ask sharp questions. Mac qualified here, too. Mostly he looked, listened. But now and then he came up with a good one. To veteran police reporter Al Lewis:

"When you write a good story, do they put your picture with it?"

Only for Columnists

"No," Al said softly. "That only happens to columnists."

And finally, after a day behind scenes, Aspiring Reporter Mac Yee summed up the reportorial calling:

"I think being a reporter is a very busy job because you travel from one place to another."

Between glimpses of the news-diggings, Mac turned interested ears to the advice of Post staffmen on the beats as to how to go forward as a reporter.

To broaden the view, he talked with men who used to be newspapermen themselves and are now Senators or District judges. He discused journalism with the District Attorney, one of those rare persons who never was a newspaperman, but who provides much news.

Trenchant Observations

From this formidable panel, the ears of Mac Yee scooped up some trenchant paragraphs on the art of newspapering:

From Al Lewis:

"The movies tell about reporters getting tips on stories. But far more big stories are broken by continuous routine check of news sources. Check and keep checking—squad leaders, detectives, policemen, everybody.

"And never stop asking questions. Back in the homicide squad they're always complaining that I ask more questions than the detectives. I do. I never stop asking questions."

Must Be Impartial

Joe Paull, The Post's court man, told Mac:

"It's not a very nice place to be around here actually, this beat. Because we get people often who aren't very nice. One thing—you musten't either hate people for sin or respect them for getting away with sin. Somewhere in between there you can be impartial. Unless you're impartial you can't report the news."

From Congressman (and Senator-elect) Mike Monroney, who was a first-rate newspaperman in Oklahoma before he took to matters political;

"You learn how to get who, what, why, when, where and how into a lead. After you learn how to get them in a lead you learn how not to get them in a lead."

Directions for Writing

Ferdinand Kuhn, The Post's State Department man and former head of the New York Times' London Bureau:

"Learn as much as you can about as many subjects as you can because you never know when you're going to have to write about medicine—or nuclear physics. I had to be a music critic suddenly once when the paper I was on ran out of one.

"When you write—a lot of reporters try to write beautiful purple passages. Don't. Write as simply and clearly as you can.

"Also, when you marry, be sure you marry a very patient girl, someone who will save something for you to eat when you get home. The hours on a newspaper are . . . well, irregular."

Robert Albright, The Post's Capitol Hill man: "Read everything you can get hold of, especially history, aconomics, political science. Don't worry, in school, about learning the technical side of the business. You can pick that up in three months on a paper."

Accent on Accuracy

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming, who was once a city editor, accented "accuracy" in the equipment of a good reporter. So did District Attorney George Morris Fay.

"Never forget," said the D. A., "that two little lines in a newspaper that are not accurate can hurt a fellow-citizen for life."

Then there was District Judge Matthew F. McGuire. As editor and publisher of the Charlestown (Mass.) News in Boston's Bunker Hill area he wrote copy, heads, ads,—"did everything except set type"—for a paper with a small circulation but a bold motto: "Nothing's impossible on' Bunker Hill." The judge gave seventh-grader Mac Yee another motto:

"Be faithful to God and country. Be studious and observant. That's the way to be a good newspaperman. Or a good anything else."

Between talks Mac ate a couple of hearty meals—one at the press table in the Senate Restaurant. At both meals he unhesitatingly ordered apple pie for dessert, remarking that in his younger days, when his mother was alive, she used to take him to the store and buy him a whole apple pie to eat by himself.

At day's end, full of advice and apple pie, Mac Yee started back for the Baptist Home for Children. In parting he hesitated, then said solemnly:

"After that experience I think that I'd still like to be a reporter. You get to know people well and still like your job."

PRESS ROOM—Surrounded by the working press at District police headquarters, Mac listens in as Al Lewis, The Post's police reporter (left) gets a news flash from a policeman in one of the D. C. precinct stations. Lewis urged Mac to ask questions constantly. Routine checks are responsible for more big stories than tips, Lewis said

City May Hire 11 Women for School Patrol

Employment of 11 women to patrol key school crossings in Alexandria will be recommended to the City Council by the police department shortly after January 1, it was learned yesterday.

In anticipation of the council's approval of a new traffic ordinance, which provides for the auxiliary policewomen, the department already has trained the first group of applicants for the part-time job.

Lieut. George F. Everly, in charge of the training program, said the women are "ready to go to work" as soon as the council gives its approval. He said the applicants have received two weeks of classroom instruction and have been given some practical training at school intersections during rush hours.

The applicants are all married and under 45 years of age, Everly said.

Under a tentative budget appropriation, subject to approval by the council Tuesday night, the women would be paid $50 a month for a maximum of four hours' work on each school day. Uniforms will be supplied by the city and will be patterned after the present department regalia "except that the women will wear skirts," according to Everly.

For each woman employed, a regular officer will be freed from "routine chores" for more important duty, police officials pointed out.

Employment of the 11 applicants will provide supervision of all school intersections but two, where traffic conditions require the presence of experienced policemen, Everly said.

Va. Bank Commissioner To Take Arlington Post

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 25 (AP).—Logan R. Ritchie will take over January 15 as State commissioner of banking, succeeding Milton R. Morgan, the State Corporation Commission announced tonight.

Morgan will resign this week to join the Arlington Trust Co. as executive vice president. Ritchie has been deputy commissioner since last April.

Ruled Suicide

Bullet Ends Life of Army Bandsman

A United States Army bandsman who, friends said, was depressed over his musical progress was found shot to death in his Arlington home yesterday noon.

The body of T/Sergt. David Leonidas Oblinger, jr., 35, of 1319 S. Pollard st., was slumped in a living-room chair, a bullet wound in the right temple.

A .32-caliber pistol lay on the floor beside him. According to Arlington detectives, no notes were found. County Coroner Dr. W. C. Welburn said he would issue a certificate of suicide.

The body was found by Shelton A. Smith, Oblinger's brother-in-law, of 3179 Westover dr. se., as he brought the bandsman's 2-year-old daughter, Sarah, home from a visit.

Police said Oblinger's wife, Mrs. Daisy M. Oblinger, was in Port Belvoir Hospital after giving birth to a baby boy on Saturday. They said she had been informed.

According to detectives, Oblinger and his daughter were to have gone to Smith's Washington home last night for dinner.

The musician, a clarinetist, had been with the United States Army Band about 15 years. During World War II he had accompanied the band across western Europe with the Army headquarters.

Neighbors said Oblinger had been nervous and "depressed" because he felt he was not making the progress he thought he should in his music.

Friends said he was a native of Georgetown, Ohio, and had lived at the Arlington address since 1940.

Yule Gifts Destroyed In Alexandria Fire

Fire in an Alexandria apartment yesterday destroyed a Christmas tree and Yule gifts and badly damaged walls and furniture while the owners were away.

Firemen from two Alexandria companies fought the blaze, in the apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Thomas, at 715 S. Washington st., for more than an hour before bringing it under control.

Artist Sketches Bicyclist Who Grabbed Purse

An amateur artist, whose pocketbook was snatched by a bicycling thief, yesterday provided police with a sketch of the thief.

The victim, Miss Diana K. Powell, 40, who is also an attorney, told police she was on her way home from midnight mass at St. Matthew's Church when the thief approached her in the 1100 block of Euclid st. nw. near her home.

He attempted to take her pocketbook but she hung on to it, she said. He started to walk away after she told him she had no money, but then came back, knocked her to the ground and cut the strap of the pocketbook from her arm, she related.

The man escaped on a bicycle. Miss Powell said only keys and personal papers were in the handbag.

Three other pocketbooks were looted and a fourth was stolen during a Christmas Eve dance at the YMCA, 1736 G st. nw., Sunday night, police reported.

Victims said they had left their pocketbooks on a counter outside of the assembly room and they believed a woman, seen searching among the handbags, may have been the thief.

Battle Urged Not to Forget School Needs

Nearby Virginia civic leaders concerned with the State's educational progress yesterday urged Gov. John S. Battle not to forget school needs in the rush to set up a civil defense program.

In a statement, Governor Battle — who campaigned for school improvements in 1949 — said school constuction in 1951 would be subordinate to civil defense needs.

"Civil defense," he said, "will take the right-of-way over everything."

Reactions came quickly. Mrs. G. A. Justusson, chairman of the Fairfax County School Emergency Association, admitted that "an added sacrifice" must be made for civil defense.

"Keep Education Foremost"

"But," she said, "in order to preserve the principles of democracy we must keep the education of our children foremost among our efforts."

She saw "no reason" why the civil defense program "should supercede our efforts in education —both are important and they should not be in conflict."

In Arlington, Dr. Ivan Booker, president of the County P-TA Council, said he hoped Governor Battle's emphasis on civil defense "will not lessen his concern for schools."

Pond Gives View

Reed K. Pond, chairman of the Arlington Citizens Committees for School Improvement, said that while civil defense is "important," Virginians "must also meet our school construction needs as rapidly as feasible."

If school needs are not met as quickly as Virginia's defense needs, Pond added, "it may mean a lost generation" of children in the State.

In his Sunday statement, Governor Battle said his policy would be to proceed with school construction until Federal restrictions make it impossible, costs get too high, or until the program begins to hamper the war effort.

After Battle's election, the Virginia General Assembly quickly enacted his 45-million-dollar program of State grants to cities and counties for school construction.

Noise in Chimney Suggests Santa, Reveals Blackbird

For a short while yesterday morning Mr. and Mrs. Morris Abramson, 5237 New Hampshire ave. nw., thought Santa Claus might be dropping in for a visit.

A noise in the chimney startled them when they got up for breakfast.

Not exactly expecting the old gent at that hour, Mr. Abramson called the Fire Department Rescue Squad to investigate.

A short while later, a blackbird appeared in the fireplace. Mr. Abramson returned him to freedom through a back window.

Body of Sailor Found in Ashes Of His Burned Maryland Home

HOLLYWOOD, Md., Dec. 25 (AP).—The body of a sailor stationed at the Patuxent Naval Station was found today in the ashes of a two-story frame building destroyed by fire.

Officials at the aviation test station identified him as Donald Lowder, 21, Aerial Photographer 3-C, of Englewood, Colo. They said his wife and 2-day-old baby are in the hospital at the Naval Station.

Lowder and two buddies, R. B. Lenier, 19, of Celeste, Tex., and Peter S. Foster, 21, of Daphne, Ala., were on the second floor of the building when fire broke out about 3:30 a. m.

Lenier and Foster escaped, but Lowder apparently mistook a closet for an exit, ran into it and was suffocated, according to Fire Chief William Holley of Leonardtown.

The body and a section of the closet dropped to the basement when the floors collapsed.

Firemen said two other families who lived in the house were away at the time of the fire, which apparently started in a kerosene stove in Lowder's apartment.

4 Small Children, Man on Crutches, Among Occupants Escaping Flames

A family of eight, four of them small children was left homeless on Christmas morning when their house near Germantown, Md., burned to the ground.

Everything they owned was destroyed by flames which firemen said apparently started near a faulty chimney about 10 a. m..

For nearly two hours the Gaithersburg-Washington Grove Volunteer Fire Department fought the blaze in the two-story, six-room frame house on Middlebrook rd., about six miles north of Gaithersburg.

Water Supply Short

Firemen were hampered by a shortage of water and the advance state of the blaze by the time they arrived. They could save only the outbuildings.

Mrs. Edith James, mother of the four children, said the family ran to safety with "just what we had on our backs."

Presents opened on Christmas Eve, including $75 worth of clothing for the youngsters, also went up in flames, Mrs. James said.

The other occupants of the house were her father, W. P. Shiflett, and his wife, Essie; Mrs. James' husband, Allen, and their children, Allen, 5; Roger, 3; Linda, 2, and Carolyn, 2 months old.

Shiflett on Crutches

Shiflett has been on crutches for more than a month. He had to be helped from the house. His daughter said he was injured while working as a carpenter for a Washington contractor.

The destitute family moved temporarily to the home of James E. Shiflett, W. P. Shiflett's nephew, at Middlebrook. Mrs. Jones said the Montgomery County Red Cross promised them aid.

Late 'Shoppers' Break Into Stores for Gifts

"Shoppers," possibly bent on picking up last-minute Christmas gifts—for free—paid after-hour visits yesterday to a number of Washington area business establishments.

Grocer Louis Schuman's inventory was reduced by some $500 between 3 p. m. Sunday and 8 a. m. yesterday by intruders who forced the rear entrance of his store at 1005 4th st. sw.

Schuman reported the loss of 18 turkeys, meat valued at $326, 25 cartons of cigarettes and candy worth $23.50.

The Williard Shop at 1033 Connecticut ave. nw. was burglarized of $365 in bills, five overcoats and miscellaneous men's furnishings, Nathan J. Kahn, the proprietor, told police.

Intruders who forced a safe with tools found on the premises took $474 from the University Esso Station, 8401 Baltimore blvd., Berwyn, William F. Martin, operator, reported to Prince Georges County police.

The safecrackers broke into a rear window, smashed a plate glass into Martin's office and worked on the safe in the furnace room, police said.

A bit of Christmas cheer was picked up by unwanted, non-paying customers who broke the glass show window of the Bell Liquor Store at 2005 M st. nw. Missing yesterday morning were 34 fifths of assorted brands of whisky, Proprietor Abraham Sperling told police.

Traditional Turkey Dinners Take Precedence for Services And Private Homes as D. C. Area Observes Another Christmas

The turkey dinner took precedence yesterday over all other Christmas Day festivities in the Washington area.

Servicemen at nearby bases partook of the Yuletide bird, as did family groups. A typical service menu was that offered at the Naval Medical Center, Bethesda.

The Navy men there started with consomme and saltines, proceeded through pickles, olives and celery hearts to a shrimp cocktail.

Then they encountered the roast turkey with sausage dressing, giblet gravy and cranberry sauce. On the side were snowflake potatoes, green peas, Parker House rolls, coffee, milk and lettuce salad.

For dessert they had fruitcake and hot mince pie with whipped cream. Candy and nuts were available for those still hungry.

Youthful Christmas cheer and music was brought early Christmas morning to shut-ins at 11 hospitals and to homes and charitable institutions in the Washington area by the 85-member Boys Club Band, which made the rounds beginning at dawn.

Peace Pleas Mark Yule In Churches

Prayers and pleas for world peace marked Christmas Day services in churches throughout the Washington area yesterday.

And many of the thousands who attended Sunday morning, evening, and midnight services returned yesterday for the Christmas ceremonies.

Those at the twenty-eighth Annual Community Christmas Service at the National City Christian Church heard the Rev. Dr. Carl Heath Kopf speak on "I'm Dreaming of a Right Christmas."

Dr. Kopf, of the First Congregational Church, said: "The whiteness is outside the heart and the house; the rightness is inside where it counts so much.

"Christmas could mean a right spirit in America, where everybody is anxious that somebody else do the sacrificing on prices and wages.

"And if Christmas could mean the start of real 'Peace on Earth,' the whole tide of history would be turned for the better, just as it was in Bethlehem."

In America, he warned, "we face a real danger of each group looking after itself and very few groups seeing the country as a whole. It takes a big man or a big movement to see other people as well as his own."

He noted the truce in the Middle East between the Arabs and Jews and said he hoped it would continue, and that a similar truce would come about in Korea.

Many Episcopal churches in the area held services yesterday. At the Church of the Epiphany, the Rev. Warren Mace declared that it "sometimes takes crises to bring men to God's truths."

At the Washington Cathedral, Canon Richard Williams preached at the morning prayer service. Earlier, Holy Communion was celebrated in Bethlehem Chapel with the Very Rev. John W. Suter, dean of the Cathedral, as the celebrant.

cluded those at Augustana Lutheran Church, New Hampshire ave. and V st. nw.; Trinity Lutheran, Mount Rainier, Md., and Faith Lutheran, in Arlington. Hundreds of Catholic worshipers attended morning masses which were held in all Catholic churches yesterday.

Sunday night services were held in many churches throughout the area. Most Protestant services began at 11 p. m. and continued until midnight. More than 1500 Catholics attended the midnight mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral, and a capacity crowd was at the midnight mass at Immaculate Conception Catholic Church.

Episcopal services Sunday night at Washington Cathedral were televised by CBS-TV and were viewed by thousands from Boston to Chicago.

Day of Choice Near, Warns King George

SANDRINGHAM, England, Dec. 25 (U.P.).—King George VI said today that "the grim shadow of war hangs over the world" and that men everywhere soon will have to decide between love and hate, creation and destruction.

In a Christmas message to the nation from Sandringham Castle in eastern England, the King said:

"It is hard to feel the happiness and merriment which naturally belongs to Christmas when the grim shadow of war hangs over the world, for, within the last few months, our countrymen have once again been called upon to lay down their lives on the field of battle."

The King said that Britons, like the Christian in John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, have gone forward only to fall back, yet have gotten up to go forward again.

The spirit in which man should go forward, King George said, "is vouchsafed to us in the message of this and every Christmas Day.

"For if our world is to survive in any sense that makes survival worth while, it must learn to love, not to hate; to create, not to destroy."

Earlier today nearly 2000 persons came to Sandringham Park by car, cycle and on horseback to cheer the King, Queen and other members of the royal family as they went to divine service at the parish church.

Despite a cold rain, the King and Queen walked back to Sandringham House from the church. Queen Mary and Princess Margaret drove back.

He retired as superintendent of the Alabama Antisaloon League and moved to Washington with his wife, Mrs. Anna H. Galt Mills, in 1942. He was a Senate doorkeeper until about two years ago.

In addition to his wife he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Sarah L. Moody of Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Marietta Murchison of Alexandria, La., and a brother, Joseph S. Mills of Flushing, N. Y.

Mr., Mrs. Hill Die Within Day Of Each Other

Mrs. Mabel C. Hill, 70, died yesterday at her home at 824 N. Fillmore st., Arlington, less than 24 hours after the death of her husband, John E. Hill, 77.

Both had been in ill health for some time. The family said Mr. Hill's death was caused by a heart ailment. Mrs. Hill suffered a stroke last Thursday and remained unconscious until her death, never knowing her husband had died, the family said.

A native of the District, Mr. Hill had lived all his life in the Washington area, where he had worked for many years as a butcher. He retired about 10 years ago. Mrs. Hill was a native of Accokeek, Md.

They are survived by two daughters, Mrs. Lester Knapp of the Fillmore st. address, and Mrs. George Steele of New Britain, Conn.; three sons, John E. Hill, who lives near Fredericksburg, Va., Alfred B. Hill of White Plains, Md., and Warren Hill of Bethesda, Md., and eight grandchildren.

Electrical 'Check' Bounces While $50 Bill Bounds

Mrs. Etta L. Wells' Christmas cheer faded yesterday along with a self-styled electrical repairman who, it turned out, was more interested in currency than current.

Mrs. Wells, a 67-year-old private nurse, found the versatile visitor puttering around in the apartment in which she lives at 5620 Colorado ave. nw., at about 3:45 p. m.

He was checking the electricity, he said. He checked it a few minutes, then made a telephone call to report that everything was okay.

After his departure Mrs. Wells made a check herself. A $50 bill, given by a daughter to buy a new coat, was missing from her pocketbook in a chest drawer.

Police are looking for a blue-eyed, brown-haired man, about 24, of medium height, with a thin face and pointed chin, wearing a green-tinged brown topcoat.

Mrs. Maude M. Ryan Dies; Revenue Bureau Worker

Mrs. Maude M. Ryan, 58, of 4115 38th st. nw., died unexpectedly of a heart attack Sunday morning while spending the Christmas holiday with her sister, Mrs. E. E. Marshall, of Eastham, Va.

A native of Scottsville, Va., Mrs. Ryan came to Washington with her husband shortly after they were married in 1927.

Besides her sister, Mrs. Ryan is survived by two brothers, O. W. Mallory, Richmond, Va., and E. Ross Mallory, Eastham, Va.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 12 noon at J. L. Speare funeral home, 1009 H st. nw. Burial ill be in Abbey Mausoleum, Arlington.

Christmas Son Born as Marine Dad Fights at Korean Front

Sergeant's First Boy Arrives Well but Late At Bethesda Hospital

Marine Corps Staff Sergeant Charles H. Seay, located somewhere in Korea, had a Christmas present yesterday but it may be many months before he can lay hands on it.

The present was an 8-pound 11-ounce son, who arrived at the Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., at 8:10 a. m. yesterday.

Even while the mother, Mrs. Marie Seay, was still recovering from the delivery, the Navy Department had a cable winging over to Korea with the proud news that the First Marine Division sergeant had a son—his first.

Mrs. Seay, a clerk-typist in the Air Force Office Procurement Division at the Pentagon, was up and around yesterday afternoon, exclaiming, "He's just like his pa."

The boy already has been named Charles H. Seay, jr., and after a few days will take up residence with his mother at 906 North Wayne st., Arlington, Va., to await the return of his father.

Mrs. Seay said she was glad "in a way" that father wasn't around yesterday, since the estimated time of arrival of the youngster was December 10 and "he'd have been walking the floors for weeks since then."

"He'd have been so excited if he'd been here, he'd have run off and left me at home when the time came," the blonde mother explained.

Seay joined the Marines 10 years ago and during World War II was on Okinawa with the First Division. The couple was married five years ago.

A number of organizations, schools and individuals would like to have those second-hand cards. Here is our latest list, compiled from reader letters. Many of these names were supplied by Mrs. E. W. DEAR ANNE:

We have a tea kettle which has quite a bit of hard scale on the inside, caused by hard water. How can you remove this deposit? E. R. G. Winchester, Va.

One way is to heat the dry kettle gently over a low flame. The resulting expansion will usually chip the scale off. The effect can be increased by the sudden dropping in of some ice water when the kettle is hot. This may prove injurious to an enameled kettle, but is safe for kettles of iron, steel or aluminum.

A method that's good for any kind of kettle is to fill it with water mixed with cider vinegar. Use a cupful of vinegar per quart of water and bring it to a boil in the kettle. Then let it stand overnight.

DEAR ANNE:

We have recently moved into an "efficiency apartment and need to keep a large red cedar chest out in the open. It is much scarred and marred, having been in storage. Can you suggest process for refinishing? It is in the regular red cedar wood, originally polished and attractive.

G. G. B., Washington, D. C.

Here's the method, though it may prove a bit unhandy in a one-room apartment. First, remove the old finish with paint and varnish remover or with sandpaper. Then, if you want a soft, mellow, natural finish, cover with a thin coat of white shellac and top with a coat of wax.

Let shellac dry thoroughly and sand lightly with fine sandpaper. Then apply a thin coat of wax, let dry, then buff with the grain.

If the chest will see considerable use, however, you may want to use a spar varnish finish. Apply two or three coats after old finish has been removed. Let surface dry thoroughly between each coat. Sand with fine sandpaper before varnishing again. Complete the job by sanding lightly and waxing.

Have You a Trumpet Slip or Petticoat?

The trumpet silhouette caught on so fast that it found most women without the right sort of underpinnings to wear with it. A full-skirted slip or petticoat is too bulky and a slim one looks too narrow and tight under the low flares of the trumpet silhouette dresses.

So obviously what you need is a trumpet slip or a trumpet petticoat — both of which are fitted to well below the hips, and then flared out to give fullness like that of the skirt.

I think the prettiest of these are those in silk satin with inset godets of lace for fullness — in black or navy blue or in colors with matching lace.

A Thought for the Morning After

Stop, Look and Think Before You Exchange

By Evelyn Hayes

"HERE COMES a white box—be kind to it!" That's what one store executive says to her sales clerks as she sees a customer approach with a Christmas exchange.

There's a lot more to her remark than meets the eye—for the buyers and sales clerks know too well the time, patience and loving effort that have gone into the selection of every one of those packages that will parade back to the stores today and tomorrow and tomorrow.

Think twice before exchanging your Christmas gifts, "especially those your husband has given you," add the stores. They tell us that wives make a habit of exchanging glamorous negligees for what the wives consider "practical robes."

WHAT WIVES FORGET is that if husbands buy feminine bits of frippery, that's what they'd like to see their Mrs. in—or they would have bought something else in the first place. After all, men aren't chronic shoppers. They buy—for themselves and others—only those things they want to be used and worn.

Some gifts even carry fashion hints which their recipients ignore in their haste to get to the exchange desks. Think twice before you return that brightly colored scarf because you say "I never wear bright colors!" Maybe the sender had an idea that a touch of bright color might be becoming—and it might be!

UNFORTUNATELY, however, a lot of women around Christmas seem to consider themselves merely the middle-man between the stores' delivery and adjustment departments—and automatically rush down to exchange whatever it is. We wonder if they ever consider that the good people who selected their gifts would enjoy the sight of those presents being worn or used.

Apparently there are also those who think the stores can produce miracles—that NOTHING is impossible. We like the story of a woman who returned a copy of "Jane Eyre," with this explanation, "I hate books written in the first person. Could I get a copy written in the third person?"

P. S. We hope you'll enjoy every one of the packages you opened yesterday, tagged "Merry Christmas!"

It's a wonderful feeling . . . smiling, dancing, snapping repartee behind a pair of beautiful eyes . . and knowing they're beautiful . . . that every glance (direct or otherwise) is packed with feminine wallop. Mr. Barron will choose your own cosmetic-color and give you a chart showing—step by step—how you can acquire beautiful eyes with Hue Slant at home. And—step by step—he'll show you the very same eye make-up technique used by Helena Rubinstein's New York Salon.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Dismayed by Evidence That She Is Second Fiddle To Her Mother-in-Law, in Husband's Estimation, Wife Asks How to Cope; She Repudiates Divorce

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My problem is my husband's attitude towards his parents. He pays them such reverence that it is sickening. I go to business six days a week and Sunday is my only time to take care of personal things, as I am busy with housework and cooking on week day evenings. Even so, John insists that we go to his parents' house every Sunday for dinner.

Invariably we spend the whole day, staying until almost midnight. This has been getting on my nerves and when I suggest we leave early he gets angry and says I need a day's relaxation. But it isn't relaxation for me. I feel so obligated for these weekly dinners that we spend more lavishly on gifts for them than we would otherwise. And when we are there, John expects me not only to help prepare the dinner and do the dishes, but also to help with the general weekly cleaning.

His mother spends her days shopping, going to bridge parties, etc., yet I am supposed to end up doing her work on Sundays, tired though I may be. In short, John doesn't care how he uses me as long as he keeps his mother thinking how wonderful he is. In fairness to his mother I must say she has never interfered with me, and I really like her even though she continues to treat him like a baby. It is his attitude that I resent. Certainly I expect him to show his mother love and respect, but there is a limit.

Recently my brother was to be married quietly. As I had raised him from childhood after our mother died, I wanted to do something special for his wedding day, so I was planning a small buffet supper for the bridal couple, immediately following the church ceremony. Then John's mother was sent to the hospital for minor surgery; it would be uncomfortable but nothing serious. John thought I should cancel the buffet supper, and called me coldhearted and said I was "dancing on the grave" when I wouldn't. I became very angry. The guests would be with us in only a few hours, and certainly it wasn't to be a wild party; so why should John take such offense?

I just can't understand his attitude. I've tried to be patient and see his side of things; but that is the trouble. I always look at the other person's viewpoint while mine gets lost in the shuffle. I have come to the conclusion that I've married a "Mom's boy," and it's not easy to admit that my husband thinks more of his mother than he does of me. As I don't believe in divorce, I am hoping you will be able to give me some help. Maybe I am in the wrong. I don't know what to think any more. I only know that I am unhappy and must find a way out of my quandary. G. S.

DEAR G. S.: Towards the end of your blast at John, you show a moment's self awareness by saying, "I've tried to be patient and see his side of things, but that is the trouble. I always look at the other person's viewpoint, while mine gets lost in the shuffle." I think you've got something there—a flash of insight that gives a clue as to where to begin to relieve the anxiety and frustration from which you suffer.

You have a compound problem in respect to John's attitude towards his parents, because both you and he are behaving immaturely in this area of conflict. Certainly John is acting childish in going home to his mother every Sunday, taking you along as mother's helper,—as if he feared she might forget him if he didn't cling to her skirts, courting her approval by harnessing you in her service, etc. But you are being equally childish in feeling that you've got to keep pace with his Sunday ritual or forfeit security in relation to him.

What is the hallmark of a healthy rational character? It is a judiciously accommodating attitude, a willingness to compromise, when dissimilar tastes are in collision, causing an impasse. Healthy accommodation isn't all one-sided. It doesn't mean "giving in," necessarily. Man and wife cannot be identical twins. They are bound to encounter the dilemma of conflicting drives at times. And in such case the mature person is able to state his preference without embarrassment, to differ with his spouse agreeably, and even to please himself instead of "obeying" the other, without dreading "punishment" in the form of sulking, disloyalty or other rejecting tactics. What he gives the partner, in lieu of slavish conformity, is room for self expressive activity too, within reasonable limits, of course.

In going to business six days a week—to help finance the marriage, I suppose—while doing your cooking and housework on an overtime basis of evenings, you regularly earn the privilege of spending Sundays to suit yourself, within a framework of moral propriety. And if you had an occasional Sunday at home, with John's blessing if not his company, I am sure you'd gladly go out with him on other Sundays—even to duty dinners at his mother's. Isn't that true? Well, this is the constructive compromise I urge upon you and John; and I guarantee it will greatly reduce impatience and promote good will in your mutual dealings, if you put it into practice.

In working your way around the difficulties presented by John's temperament, it is not so important to understand the motivation of his vexatious conduct, as it is necessary to get yourself on the path of right action. Don't take him too seriously; don't try too hard to please him. When he blows his top, don't lose your head in anger too.

When he tries to push you into kowtowing to his mother-worship, you should counter with sturdy non-cooperation when you feel so inclined; and don't apologize for acting as if you consider yourself her equal in the universe. Take yourself off the defensive, psychologically; gain confidence in manifesting your own ideas, and paradoxically you'll become much more tolerant of John's infantile bias than you are at this writing.

Wassail Bowls Round Out the Yule Celebration

By Elizabeth Maguire

AFTER kiddies had romped from dawn to sunset yesterday, Christmas merry making switched to the wassail bowl. Neighbors and friends gathered round, trees were lighted up, and carols were sung, ending the best day of the year on an old-fashioned note.

"EGGNOG after 6" enticed many to the home of Dr. and Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, where poinsettias and Christmas cards gave a festive air. Angels were all around, perched on the mantel and floating through the Christmas tree. A welcoming fire was laid, and the staircase was laced with garlands of holly.

Mrs. Charles J. Barone of Detroit, Mich., who is visiting Mrs. Cajigas for the holidays, was a guest, as well as Mrs. James T. McCallum of Bentnor, N. J., who came with her host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Romig.

Assistants of Mrs. Cajigas were Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Mrs. Albert Woodward, Mrs. Ney Evans, Mrs. Jesse Saugstad, Mme. Vladimir Rybar, Mrs. C. George Mattusch, Mrs. Frank Yates, and Mrs. May De Burr. Miss Betty Ann Joy and Miss Patricia Brewer were junior assistants.

MISS Mary N. S. Whiteley had friends in for a wassail bowl party from 5 o'clock at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Peyton Whiteley on Woodland dr.

AN EGGNOG PARTY from 5:30 to 8:30 p. m. was given by Capt. and Mrs. Valentine Pottle at their home on Sedgwick st. A lighted tree was on the porch and holly decorated the house. Capt. and Mrs. Pottle also entertained Christmas Eve at a dinner for 10, which included Capt. and Mrs. Wade De Weese of Annapolis.

AT THE CANADIAN Embassy, the Ambassador and Mrs. Wrong gave an annual Christmas dinner for members of the staff and their wives. Dinner was served from a buffet and guests were seated at small tables.

MISS Bette-Baron Smith, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Louise Smith, was honored Christmas Eve at a 5 to 9 p. m. party given by Miss Elizabeth Phelps Silver, post-deb daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Silver. The party was held at the Silver residence on California st.

Dr. and Mrs. Silver attended, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Smith. Others in the gathering were Dr. and Mrs. Bryant Cooper, Capt. and Mrs. Allen Ingram Price, Miss Kathryn Early Holmer, Miss Joan Harper Pennington, Miss Elizabeth Cortright Wetherill, Miss Carol Cunningham, Miss Louise Cahill, Miss Gwendolyn Fairlamb, Miss Dorethe Parmly, Miss Betsy MacCubbin, Miss Eleanor Tydings and Miss Mary-Stuart Montague Price.

Among the men were Colt de Wolf, jr., Archibald MacGlasson, Bradford de Wolf, Robert Carter, Warwick Carter, William Carter,

Little Money Needed for Accessories

GRACE
... perked up with accessories

By Ann Lawrence

HERE'S GRACE'S other dress that we altered. In this picture we show you exactly how Grace looked after adding the accessories that we chose. The money involved in fixing up this one was negligible. Again it meant only a new hat... gloves... a strip of white pique... a white hanky... a little gold metal pin.

We've already told you how we altered it, and with this done, the rest of the job was comparatively simple. As a result of alteration, the collar hugs her neck in a trim manner. Seeing how fresh a bit of white is next to Grace's face, we took a strip of hemmed pique, shaped into a slight curve and tied it ascot-fashion into the neckline. The finishing touch here was a little gold metal disc. In the tiny pocket, we put a white linen handkerchief.

The color tones of the plaid are greeny gray, but to prevent it from becoming too drab we selected a pair of mustard yellow gloves. Grace's hat — a brown felt, again tilted forward and to the side — is a good basic model that she will be able to wear with other things. It, too, is veiled — not flossily but in a pleasantly tailored manner that makes it suitable for a 9 a. m. appearance in an office.

WE WANT GRACE always to wear forward hats — veiled if possible. The off-the-face styles that she has been wearing may be more comfortable and require less adjustment, but on-the-face hats are infinitely younger-looking on her and more becoming. The veils reflect color onto her face, and hide her wrinkles.

Even yellow gloves are not extravagant since they go well with navy, gray, black, dark green and brown. That one bright touch of color goes a long way towards picking up a costume, too — lifting it out of banality, giving it and the wearer, flair.

To fry unblanched almonds heat the cooking oil in deep fat to 325 to 350F., then add almonds and cook four to five minutes. Spread the nuts on a paper towel to cool and drain, but sprinkle them with salt while they're still hot.

Chopped raisins are nice added to a package of prepared vanilla pudding.

Thinly sliced onion rings make an attractive and zesty garnish for a salad of romaine and watercress; or use them on top of salad of cooked beets and shredded green cabbage.

Party at Morningside

The day before Christmas, members of the Idle Club Elite gave an early afternoon party for the children of Morningside. Nearly 200 youngsters were guests between the hours of 2 and 5 p. m. Ice cream, cake and punch were served in the clubhouse rooms, and there were stockings and presents for each child.

For Sleuths Of Fashion

HERE ARE two fashions to be featured Thursday in Woodward & Lothrop's showing, "Juniors, Are You Fashion Sleuths?" The style display will be held in the junior miss department at 11 a. m. and 3 p. m.

COTILLION gown (at right) for the junior belle to ring the New Year in. Designed by Emily Wilkens for a junior to wear now—and later for spring dances. The big news here is the fabric—REAL silk, interestingly textured. The hooped-effect is built in.

LILAC is the news below—the newsiest of hues for spring. There's news, too, in the slim look of the mushroom-pleated skirt, in the glitter buttons on the scoop-neck blouse. The skirt and shirt are separates—in wool jersey pastels.

Walter Winchell . . . In New York

The Broadway Lights

Stage Door: Italian Actress Lia di Leo, who announced in Rome that she will be "the next Mrs. Robert Taylor," delivered a similar boast about Orson Welles a few months ago . . . Denise Darcel of "Pardon Our French" is the envy of most women. She melted to 115 the hard way. "I just suffered!" She weighed nearly 200 . . . Cary Grant, one of the richest actors, got richer investing heavily in "Streetcar Named Desire." He has a huge chunk of another click, "Bell, Book and Candle" . . . Marcia Henderson (she plays Wendy in "Peter Pan") and the management are divorcing. Temperament trouble, back-stagers report . . . Here's a switch: Clive Brook, due soon in "Second Threshold," wishes it known he is 63 and not 59, as Who's Who alleges . . . The Diamond Horseshoe's new show is full of zing . . . Sir Cedric Hardwicke decided to spend the rest of the season co-starring with Kath Cornell in "Cap't Carvallo," which folded in the tryout. Because he's British Sir Cedric must wait 6 months before he can even consider another tryout . . . George Jean Nathan's nifty on "Guys and Dolls": It is so good it should run as long as Dewey."

In the Wings: Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein were at Bill Bertolotti's when the orchestra went into their hit, "Some Enchanted Evening" . . . Clutching Oscar's hand (in mock affection) Dick quipped: "Lissen. They're playing Our Song!" . . . Shortest capsule critique of the season: Herald Trib critic H. Barnes on "Let's Make An Opera"; "Let's not!" It folded in five perfs.

Curtain Time: The week's single opener, "Out of This World" (Cole Porter's show), was judged by some as more beautiful than wonderful, while other first-night sentinels hailed it as wonderful and beautiful. Reviewer Dick Watts' blessing: "A fine, beautiful, imaginative musical" . . . Christmas Week brings 3 revivals (no new entries) by the Theater's chief meal tickets: Shakespeare, Shaw & Ibsen . . . "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" speaks the Dollar Sign fluently. The profits are over $280,000 . . . Backers of "Death of a Salesman" now have 100 percent on their investment . . . Zillionaire T. Farrell delivers "Angel in the Pawnshop" to the Booth January 18. It features Edw. Dowling and Joan McCracken, two reliable entertainers . . . Duke Ellington's major event (a jazz concert plus choral background) is set for the Met on January 21 . . . Big hug by a critic for Mary McCarty in "Bless You All": "She can perform, but not miracles."

The Cinemagician: "Mr. Music" offers Bing's ingratiating style and a batch of merry-makers popping in and out with gay specialties. Some of the reviewers fussed about its scenario . . . "California Passage" is a spotty adventure. More so-so than gee-whiz . . . "Harvey," starring James Stewart as the amiable lush, is as comical as the stage hit . . . "Silver Raiders" is routine saddle-faddle . . . Heebie meets Jeebie in "Seven Days to Noon," a suspenseful British import. It deals with an atom scientist who disappears after warning he will atomize London . . . Jimmy Cagney and Gordon MacRae give "West Point Story" its pep . . . "Rookie Fireman" is a false alarm . . . "Emergency Wedding" is no laughing matter.

Movietown Memos: Have some irony: Gloria Swanson hasn't had an offer from Hollywood since her widely applauded performance in "Sunset Blvd." That film dealt with a former star, ignored by cinema moguls . . . Wall Street reports the skidding of film stocks, but Hollywood profits for 1950 are close to 35 million—a 10 percent boost over '48 . . . Why foreign flickers click: The imported trilogy, "Ways of Love" (blessed by all critics), could not be produced in Hollywood. Its adult themes are tabu there . . . Judy Garland's last film ("Summer Stock") will be titled "If You Feel Like Singing" in Britain . . . "Our Very Own," snubbed by critics, has grossed $2,750,000 for S. Goldwyn to date . . . "So Young, So Bad," which was panned with sledgehammers, will be United Artists' top coin maker this year . . . Stanley Kramer's "Cyrano" and "The Men" landed among 1950's Ten Best Pictures . . . Luscious Michele Morgan in the big Roman spectacle, "Fabiola," is a lovely thing to see . . . Garbo keeps spurning teevy despite astronomical salary bids.

The Airistocrats: Runyon's "Dancing Dan's Christmas" was transplanted via "Suspense" and retained the tinkle of the delightful jingle-bellodrama . . . Ray Malone made Thursday eve'g fine for stay-at-homes with his hoofing, backgrounded by Bongodruns . . . NBC's "Watch the World" takes the medal for an educational show tailored in an entertaining style . . . Little Casey Murrow, 5, son of the Ed Murrows, reached into your heart Friday eve'g on daddy's newscast. A darling child, who discussed Christmas (and the boys in Korea) with his mother. Papa taped it. A beautiful few moments . . . Mr. Murrow's new weekly, "Hear It Now," offers recorded excerpts of the week's top news. It is the drama of history with the original cast. Big Time . . . Very amusing, we think, the way killers (on gumshoe dramas) build up an air-tight alibi for 28 minutes—then wilt and Tell All—just in time for the final commershill . . . The N. Y. Times' teevy detective reports: "It is a crowning irony that for all its magic, television is not doing as good a job of reporting the news as radio."

The Story Tellers: Sumner Welles uses facts like clubs in Foreign Affairs. He hammers the myths that FDR played chump for Stalin & Co. . . . Esquire has a corker about Moscow's shortwave falsifiers who attacked a non-existent American spy in Iran . . . Collier's outlines a 1952 victory campaign for Republicans . . . The late Alva Johnston's typewriter silhouette of Wilson Mizner in The New Yorker is porcupined with Mizner's sharp wit . . . Hollywood's tremendous impact abroad is recorded eloquently by Holiday . . . The faces of battle-worn Marines in Life convey the meaning of war no words could decode . . . Henry C. Wolfe's essay on Yugoslavia in Harper's is must reading for the educated . . . Doris Fleeson's piece, "Washington's Ten Most Powerful Women," is another corker in the January McCall's . . . Time's top item is the one about the Chicago stripper who explained why she shot her husband 4 times: "I like an appreciative audience, and not even my husband can get away with falling asleep while I'm talking."

The Press Box: Republicans who have been lashing the Administration's contradictions now have a beaut of their own: The Herbert Hoover-Thomas Dewey foreign policy split . . . The Trib minced no words replying to the ta-ta message of Red China's Wu: "We came here for peace." The editorialist's rebuttal: "Everybody comes for peace. The trouble is that nobody brings it with them" . . . Columnist Arthur Krock goes shopping for worries. He fears if we create a huge army and it isn't sent to war, "it would confront the nation with colossal problems." Onowlookahere! . . . Irony of the Week: Vishinsky sailing for the Ivan Curtain on the "Liberte" . . . Thanks to Senator Kefauver, the recent adieulogy on Jolson went into the Cong. Record December 7. The fourth WW column inserted in a month . . . From the December 18 N. Y. Times: "Moscow: Today was the day of local elections. It afforded an excellent dichotomy between the East and West." He means division . . . It's a lucky thing for poor Margaret that she doesn't have to write letters to all of daddy's critics.

Police, Fire Funds Sought By 7 Mayors

Mayors of seven Prince Georges County municipalities are preparing the proposals to get additional revenue for police and fire protection.

They will be sprung on the new Republican County Commissioners at their first meeting in Hayattsville on January 5.

To obtain money for town police financing, the mayors plan to ask for return by the county of a substantial portion of real estate taxes, paid by town residents, which are used by the county for police purposes.

They will also ask financial assistance to local fire departments from a special fire tax on unincorporated areas served by the town equipment.

The first idea, county assistance to local police departments, is not exactly a new one, as it was broached to the old Democratic commissioners last summer, drawing a cool reaction.

The present proposals came out of a meeting of the mayors of municipalities in the metropolitan section of the county earlier this month, called by Mayor Herbert W. Reichelt of Mount Rainier.

Present were Mayors Caesar L. Aiello of Hyattsville; Frederick W. Waigand of Riverdale; Merrill L. Harrison of Laurel; James L. Russell of Brentwood; Ross Beville of Takoma Park, and Henry Caspare, representing Mayor John N. Torvestad of Colmar Manor.

The thinking behind the tax refund for police protection, according to Reichelt, is this:

"By providing their own local police forces, the towns are relieving the county of the burden of policing the incorporated areas. These local forces are supported by municipal taxes paid by town property owners, who also contribute, through county real estate taxes, to the support of the county force.

"Consequently, we believe it is only equitable for the county to return a portion of its tax money to the towns for maintenance of their police departments.

A possible precedent was established last year when Montgomery County withdrew its police from Takoma Park and substituted a lump sum payment for support of the town force. Takoma Park lies on both sides of the Prince Georges-Montgomery line, but no support is given by Prince Georges.

The mayors are not asking for return of all the county money, Reichelt pointed out, as the county supplies certain police facilities—principally radio communications—to the towns.

As for the fire tax, the mayors feel it is needed because a large number of fire calls—estimated as high as 50 percent—are received from the large, unincorporated area lying between the Mount Rainier–Hyattsville-College Park section and Takoma Park.

The fire departments are supported by local taxation plus an equally divided two-cent county fire tax per $100 valuation.

The taxes paid by persons living within the towns, according to Reichelt, are much larger than the sums returned to the towns.

Sergeant Is Home for Yule In Nick of Time

The Air Force played Santa yesterday to bring another wounded Washingtonian home from Korea in time for Christmas—Army Sergt. Charles H. Vaughan, 29, who landed at Bolling Air Force Base.

Sergeant Vaughan, son of Mrs. Bertha N. Vaughan of 515 Ogden st. nw., is on his way to an Army hospital in Camp Pickett, Va. He has a three-day holiday pass.

Wounded in the fighting on November 29, he was cut in 14 places when a mortar exploded near his tank as he was climbing out. His most serious wound is in his left knee.

When he landed here, he made a telephone call to his mother, who was visiting her daughter, Mrs. Newton Brooke, of 119 Maple ave., Takoma Park, Md. The surprised family had just been talking about how nice it would be to have him home for Christmas.

A tank commander with the Twenty-third Infantry Regiment, Second Division, Vaughan had been in Korea since September. During World War II he fought in Europe, where his tank company was the first to reach the Elbe River.

Vaughan has been in the armed service since he was 18, when he enlisted in the National Guard.

FULTON, Miss., Dec. 25 (AP).—A 60-year-old former school teacher shot and killed a teen-age boy who threw a firecracker on his porch today.

The sheriff said Wilemon and four other boys had been tossing Christmas firecrackers on Spencer's porch. Spencer said he fired his gun with no intention of hitting any of the youths, adding: "I just thought they'd leave me alone if I fired my gun off."

Red Shellfire Wounds Area Man in Korea

Hospital Corpsman 2/c Alvin W. Real was wounded in fighting near Changjin Reservoir December 2, according to a letter he wrote his wife.

Real's father-in-law, Carl F. Reichert, of 914 N. Stuart st., Arlington, said the letter arrived before any official notification from the Defense Department. Real's wife, Mrs. Ellen May Real, lives at 4102 Decatur ave., Kensington.

Reichert said Real wrote he was wounded in the side by shellfire and also had suffered frostbitten hands and feet before being flown to a hospital in Japan.

The wounded man was attached to the Fifth Regiment of the First Marine Division, which was forced to fight free of a Communist trap.

A native of Smiley, Tex., Real enlisted in the Navy when 17. He saw action in the Pacific Theater during World War II and was later stationed at Bethesda Naval Hospital for about three years.

The Reals have an infant daughter, Darlene Frances, who was born shortly after her father went overseas.

Once Got $15 a Week

Radio Writer Grabs Top Television Spot

By William Ferris

CHICAGO (AP).—Want to know how a one-time $15 a week newspaper reporter reaches the higher income tax brackets? He goes into television.

Ask Bill Halligan. He's president of the Hallicrafters Co. Its famous name in short wave radio for many years now is one of the top 10 in television sales.

William J. Halligan's first job was as a reporter on the now defunct Boston Telegram. That was back in 1924. He wrote a column, "Radio Waves," one of the first radio columns in the country.

Long before that, Halligan was fascinated by radio. In his 'teens he constructed his first receiver by winding wire around an old cardboard mailing tube. He built a transmitter and became a "ham" operator.

THE "HAM" is dear to the heart of Halligan. "The radio ham market," he says, "is the most challenging and the most thrilling in all radio." It was by making equipment for "hams" that Hallicrafters got its start.

"Lots of people just get a kick out of listening to police calls on short waves," Halligan said. "Or you can tune in on ship-to-shore conversations—evesdropping is a lot of fun, you know. We aren't thinking of halting our short wave receiver production."

Today, Hallicrafters' output is mostly television sets—about 80 percent of total production. "Ham" communications still take a part of its output. So do military communications, which will probably grow.

"There's a lull right through here in military orders," Halligan says. "It's a temporary lull between the batch we had a while back and the batch we know is coming."

HALLICRAFTERS had plenty of experience with military equipment in the last war. The company built complete truck and trailer communications systems for the Army Signal Corps.

Halligan recalls the story of one transmitter sold to the Federal Bureau of Investigation prior to America's entry into World War II.

"Years later," he says, "we learned it had been shipped to Pearl Harbor and set up in the hills. When regular equipment was destroyed in the Japanese air attack, that transmitter was pressed into service—for a few vital hours it provided communications with the outside world."

Hallicrafters started in depression days—1933. At that time Halligan was selling radio supplies in Chicago. Part of his line was a short wave receiver. Halligan had ideas about improving these sets.

Halligan had a set made incorporating his ideas. Then he set out to sell the set.

"That was the start of Hallicrafters," he says. "All the money we had was in our pockets. We got orders, then got material on the basis of those orders and then got money when we sold the sets."

AFTER THE WAR, Hallicrafters jumped into television. "It was a natural for us," Halligan says, "because we'd been building radio sets for years bracketing the frequencies now used for television channels."

In the fiscal year ended August 31 the company had net sales of $28,513,540.

In the wild and woolly television field, with numerous manufacturers scrambling for position, a smaller company sometimes has an advantage. It can change its pace faster. Hallicrafters did that last year when it became the first manufacturer to sell sets with the rectangular tube.

Some Sage Advice About Smokers and Fire

Maj. Charles S. Coulter of 100 Maryland ave. ne. notes with dismay the large number of shoppers who smoked in department stores during the pre-Christmas buying rush.

Major Coulter's interest in fire prevention goes back to 1915, when he was elected to the International Association of Fire Engineers. So I checked with Fire Marshal Ray Roberts—and got a surprise.

"Who enforces the law which prohibits smoking in department stores, elevators and such?" I asked.

"There's no such law," Roberts told me. "To enforce one, you'd need an army of policemen. What we do have is a system by which we request that people refrain from smoking in certain places, and it works out pretty well."

"You're satisfied with the voluntary set-up eh?"

"We're never satisfied, so long as there are fires anywhere," he answered. "In recent years more women have taken up smoking, and of course more smokers means more chance for fires. But we feel that polite requests—reminders if you like—are just as effective as a law would be."

"Do we have many fires in the downtown stores?"

"Any number of fires is too many," Roberts replied. "Some time ago we had one that started when a woman tried on a hat with a long veil without taking the cigarette out of her mouth. The veil flared up, the woman threw it from her into a pile of other hats, and by the time we got the situation under control $40,000 worth of damage had been done."

Christmas week is an especially good time to be extra careful about fires, Roberts pointed out. Christmas trees, wrapping paper, tinsel and many other seasonal items are potential fire hazards.

"For that matter," Roberts added, "the common portable oil stove is a danger all winter long. Its portability is a desirable feature to the owner, but a headache to us, because in moving it about there's always the chance that the owner will start a costly fire. But of course there are more cigarette smokers than portable oil stoves, so we've always got to watch out for the smoker who is careless."

"You sound like a man who doesn't smoke," I said.

"Quit your kidding," laughed Roberts. "I smoke all the time—except when common sense tells me that it's dangerous."

Just to check, I talked to a clerk in one of our big department stores. "What can you do?" she sighed. "The sign asks 'em please not to smoke, and there they stand with a cigarette dangling from their lips while they go through a pile of silk or rayon underthings. If a spark drops on the merchandise, you're sure to have a neat little hole burned in it — but what can you do? They're our customers."

$ SIGNS OF THE TIMES

About five years ago, Mathilde M. Carpenter of 1126 11th st. nw. saw a picture in a store window. It reminded her so much of her home that she bought it, for $6.95.

The other day she saw the same picture, in the same type of frame. It is now priced at $27.50.

One of the more attractive habitues of the Capitol Hill press galleries is Winifred Nelson Gall, who covers for the Phoenix (Ariz.) Republic and Gazette.

Win shared a cab with a couple of lady shoppers on the Saturday before Christmas, and of course the gals were chattering about the presents they had bought for their youngsters.

"My Jimmie wanted a toy cowboy gun," said one, "and I got him the best one they had. It's really something. Looks like a real pistol, and even shoots real bullets."

"Wow," comments Win, "the full force of what she said has just hit me."

Auto Plants Eyed for Defense

By Drew Pearson

The Defense Department has written a secret memo on mobilization, proposing that either the automobile industry or the radio and television industry be drafted for war production — before taking "standby" plants out of mothballs.

Pearson

This may mean cutbacks in automobiles and television sets sooner than otherwise expected.

The secret memo outlining the Defense Department's views follows: "It appears to be most desirable to convert existing established industries, whose commercial output is cut back because of controls or shortages, to the production of war goods. Before attempts are made to open up 'standby' plants, the Department of Defense favors utilizing the automotive industry or the radio and television industry before building new plants or opening shadow plants."

The memo points out that an operating plant can be reconverted so that the first war goods will roll off the production line in 9 to 12 months. On the other hand, it takes 15 to 18 months to prepare a "standby" plant for production.

"The opening of a 'standby' plant involves not only tooling but also installation of a production organization and the recruitment and training of necessary labor," explains the secret memo.

NOTE—Taking the airplane industry as an example, the memo shows how production can be expanded. The memo reports that a combination of industries "which will produce 5000 planes in the first 12 months will produce 18,000 planes in the second year and 50,000 planes in the third year."

Truman's Christmas List

At the White House just before Christmas, Congressman Compton White of Idaho asked Mr. Truman: "Mr. President, next to world peace, which we all have at the top of our Christmas list, what do you want the most this Christmas?"

"I'd like," replied the President, "to be all alone for about 10 days."

NOTE—When the President leaves Washington, all official duties move with him.

Truman and Acheson

One of the first things Secretary Acheson did on returning from Brussels was to thank President Truman for his strong statement supporting him against GOP criticism. The President's ringing defense, Acheson said, made him proud to be a member of the Cabinet.

Putting his arm around Acheson's shoulder, Truman said:

"Dean, as long as I'm President there will never be any other Secretary of State. I don't care how much the Republicans belly-ache. You're going to be here at my side, because I know what you've done to prepare our country against communism."

Washington Brains

Mike Di Salle, the new price boss, was asked by an old friend from Ohio what impressed him the most in Washington. The former Mayor of Toledo quipped:

"Every second person I meet is introduced as 'the brains behind' some Government executive or member of Congress. What puzzles me is, with all these brains around, how did we get ourselves in such a jam?"

Railroad Strike

During the middle of the railroad labor negotiations at the White House, John Steelman, likable administrative assistant to the President, came into the room holding a copy of The Washington Merry-Go-Round.

The column stated: "Inside fact is that President Truman was warned weeks ago of a railroad strike unless John Steelman, his genial White House aide, brought union and management together . . . Senator Morse of Oregon, former chairman of the War Labor Board, had advised Truman: 'Bring both sides into a hotel room and keep them there until they get together . . . You need a good mediator, one that both sides have faith in.'"

Steelman read the column. Then after some remarks about its author, he proceeded to do exactly as recommended. He kept negotiators in almost continuous session until they reached an agreement.

Lives Versus Factories

It is almost unbelievable that a Congressman would consider factories more important than human lives. Yet that is what Congressman Clare Hoffman, Michigan Republican, said on the House floor the other day.

Arguing against civil defense, Hoffman said:

"If this was a bill to protect, for example, the blast furnaces of . . . Pennsylvania, or if it was something like that, I could see the reason for it, because we must have blast furnaces. We must have production facilities. If it was a bill to protect other war production industries, I could see the reason for it and go along with it. But here is a bill to protect the civilian population, who cannot be in any danger unless there is an attack upon this country."

When the roll was called, Hoffman was the only Congressman to vote against civil defense.
